

LET US SMILE.

The thing that goes the furthest toward making life worth while, that costs the least and does the most is just a pleasant smile.

ETHICS OF THE KITCHEN.

In the Big Restaurants the Chef Exercises Military Discipline. "The cooks employed by the four or five big New York restaurants form an interesting coterie," said the old restaurateur.

"As you probably know, the cooks, as a rule, receive so much a month and 'found'—that is, they are given their meals. With their meals they have what they want to drink, and, strange to say, it is generally beer. When the meal is ready, no one sits down until the chef has taken his place at the head of the table and given the signal, like the inter-locutor in a minstrel show.

"But to return to the chef. In addition to being the absolute ruler of the kitchen, he has the unique distinction of wearing a starched cap, jacket and apron. The other cooks wear garments which are not starched. The only other person who is permitted to don starched clothing is the son of the house.

Straightening Sticks. In some parts of Europe roots are specially cultivated for the growth of straight sticks, to be used as walking and umbrella sticks, and great care is exercised to keep them straight.

Too Much Killing in Africa. I have one thing more to say, and I say it in proof of my opinion that there has been a great deal too much killing in Africa. During the last ten years my routes, added to those of my colleagues, exceed 20,000 miles beyond the reach of railroads.

A Caustic Critic. An indifferent actor who bitterly resented the German journalist Saphir's criticisms revenged himself by chalking on his door the word "Ass." Saphir, who recognized the hand, dressed himself very carefully the next day and returned the call.

Truth About Grant.

The following timely article is a communication recently published in the Atlanta Constitution: Editor Constitution: Not long ago you "reproduced by permission from the New York World" Sunday Magazine an article by Mrs. Jefferson Davis on "The Humanity of Gen. Grant."

Mrs. Davis has certainly depended upon imagination and hearsay in this eulogy on Grant. Speaking of the sword story of Appomattox, she says: "General Grant did not keep it as a trophy, but respectfully returned it to the hand which had made its fame as deathless as that of Excalibur."

In his memoirs, Gen. Grant says that Gen. Lee told him that in the Confederate army the cavaliers and artilleers owned their own horses. Gen. Grant was of opinion that the war was about ended; that most of the Confederates were small farmers and would not be able to make a crop without "the aid of the horses they were then riding."

This horse story has been told so often that no doubt some persons believe that Gen. Grant sent Gen. Lee's soldiers home on horseback, but that is not the case. When the surrender came Gen. Lee had only 7,892 infantry with arms in their hands.

When it comes to magnanimous treatment of Confederates, Grant is not to be classed with Sherman. Gen. Benjamin F. Butler states that there was an agreement between Sherman and his leading officers to provide a ship at Charleston for the escape from the country of Jefferson Davis and such of his cabinet and others as chose to go with him.

There are no married flirts in South America, no scandals caused by unfaithful wives, no ambitious woman plotting in their secluded homes, so far as is known. There are no women's rights' conventions, temperance societies, no daughtes' or mothers' meetings. There is not even a woman's what club in the whole country. The wife knows nothing of the family finances, and she is not consulted in the consideration of her husband's serious affairs. The question may well be asked, "What in the world do these women do with their time?" And the answer is, that their days are quite as full of activities, mental and physical, as they wish them to be. South American women do not crave the freedom and publicity of life they see enjoyed by their sisters in other countries. They prefer the seclusion with the protection of their own method of life. They are very charitable, too, and the kindness itself to the poor people in their neighborhood, as they send portions of bread and meat every day to their poor neighbors.—Richmond News.

Managing a Husband.

"Aunt" Charlotte (colored—very much so) was so mild a creature that we had never suspected it of her. The good auntie was a widow, a fact of which she seemed rather proud, though she always spoke of the late departed with the greatest respect and often deplored her condition; but the state of widowhood appeared to be rare in her circle, and it gave her a sort of distinction. Somehow, too, she seemed to hold vaguely that it rendered her judgment clearer and made her decisions lesserving of greater attention.

"Fact is," she began one day, without warning, "yo' gotter know how to get er-long wid a man. Ain't no man wot ain't gotter be managed, 'deed there aint. There was my 'Gustus—jess the bestest-meaning man, but whah would I be in if I hadn't managed him? Yo' see, he used to be a potah on a sleeping kyar, an' he'd come home sleepy and cross, which was natural. Well he'd come an' scold round 'bout this thing an' udder thing. Course I knowed he didn't mean it, but I seen it didn't do him no good, an' I didn't do me no good. So I jess made up my mine to see 'bout it.

"One mohnin' in he come 'bout 9 o'clock, an' he jess kinder found fault in er gen'ral way 'bout everything, an' den went into de udder room an' jess flopped himself down on de white bed-spread 'bout so much as taken' off his shoes an' went to sleep. This was jess a little too much for me, an' I says to myself, 'He mah lawf, 'as-band ther promised to love an' honah an' 'boy, but I gotter tek him in hand fer his own good, so I have!

"So, after awhile, when he was snorin' right lively, I jess tek mah needle an' mah thread and goes in an' I draws de spread all up around him, an' I sews it good an' strong all up around him, jess like a oat in a bag, tight, an' says I, 'when I let dat oat out dat bag he'll be er better oat, so he will!' Den I gets de tater mashah an' I jess gives it to him good, hard's I could pound. He wakes up an' 'gins to holler mighty loud, I tells yo'; but I jess keeps on a-swinging dat mashah. He keeps tearing round right smaht, but he can't get erway nohow.

"Den I rests a little an' asks him how he feels 'bout de future, an' he don't seem to feel right, an' keeps trying to get out, an' pretty soon turns ovah; so I gets up an' pretty soon turns ovah; so I gets up an' I jess wash him some moah on 't'other side, mobby little was dan befoff, seeing I had a hard subject that wa'n't ready to listen to reason. An hyme-by he 'comes more still, an' I seen he was coming to be rekonciled, so I stops, an' says I, 'Gustus, do yo reckon yo' be good now an' stop yo' fault-finding?' an' says he, 'Deed I will, Cha'lotte! Lemmy out, please!' An' I seen he meant it, so I jess ripped de seams wid mah shears an' let him out: an' a mighty meek colahed man he was, too, an' nevah was'n't cross no moah, an' took off his shoes befo he went to bed. It's jess as I say—yo' gotter manage a man."—Harper's Magazine.

The Land of Benedict.

The men in South America hold their women in highest respect. Not only do they accord them the polite distinction of outward deference, but they guard them with an earnest solicitude that protects them from every care, and they bear from them every burden that man can carry. The chivalry of the olden time survives among these people, and that is doubtless one reason why the women are so contented with their lot. A charming seneca assured me that the South American women make the best wives in the world. After marriage, the woman is as one lost to the world. Her career is finished so far as matters outside her domestic affairs are concerned. Her sphere of influence is henceforth inclosed within the triple courts of her husband's house, and consists in bringing up her children and in exercising a mild sovereignty in her domestic domain.

There are no married flirts in South America, no scandals caused by unfaithful wives, no ambitious woman plotting in their secluded homes, so far as is known. There are no women's rights' conventions, temperance societies, no daughtes' or mothers' meetings. There is not even a woman's what club in the whole country. The wife knows nothing of the family

The Washington Relics.

A dispatch to the Baltimore Sun from Washington says: The correspondence between Senator Daniel of Virginia, and President McKinley, looking to the placing of the relics of George Washington in the hands of George Washington Curtis Lee has aroused interest of those priceless treasures now in the National Museum.

In a collection of this sort it is almost impossible to select the most interesting, but perhaps the tents used by Washington during the Revolutionary War appeal most strongly to the visitors to the museum. The sleeping tent is of linen and a marquee tent is of wool with a complete linen cover. They are so well preserved that it is almost impossible to believe that they were made over 125 years ago, and that they passed through severe service. The style is very much the same as that prevailing to-day.

The china is of that rich old pattern which attracts the eye of the antiquary. Of all, the most conspicuous are the Cincinnati pieces, which have a curious history with some mystery attached. They were made in China, the decorations being largely on the border, but in the center of the design of an angel bearing the arms of the Society of the Cincinnati. The curious feature of this is that the Chinese should have known anything about this society, then just in its infancy. The bill of lading calls for two sets, but it is not known for whom either was imported.

Washington, it appears, heard of their arrival at Baltimore and sent an agent to buy one. No one seems to know what became of the others set.

Other pieces in the collection are associated with Martha Washington, these belonging to a service said to have been presented to her by the French officers who participated in the Revolution. They consist of a large plate, a small plate and a cup and saucer of white porcelain bearing the initials "M. W." in a gold monogram in the center of each piece. The border bears the names of the 13 original States in oval medallions of green. These pieces are badly cracked.

Another article belonging to the original First Lady of the Land is an iron treasure chest, in which Mrs. Washington was wont to keep her jewels, papers and other valuable possessions. In the same case with this are the iron hall lantern from Mount Vernon and a pair of wrought iron andirons.

The most valuable items in the collection are two Worcester vases, 13 1/2 and 18 inches high respectively. They are of the dark blue porcelain, relieved with gold and are decorated in O'Neil's best manner, with some of his celebrated animal paintings. A broken punch bowl of Chinese porcelain, a large mirror and a few minor articles complete the Lee collection.

One of the laws of Texas imposes heavy fine and imprisonment on lawyers who forment suits against railroads and other corporations, or who advance money to clients to secure such cases.
