A Tale of Two Lovers and a Sterr. Father.

"It ain't no use in a-goin' ag'in your pa, Jennie. He's had his own way round here continual fur more'n thirty years, an' you'll jest hev to give in. No use talkin' at him. It only makes him wuss."

Poor little Mrs. Olcott had been accustomed during the whole of her married life to "jest give in," and her only chance of peace was in yielding to her selfishly determined husband and allowing him to carry his point without opposition.

Jennie was differently constituted. She inherited her father's strong will, and he had, much to his surprise, suddenly discovered an oppos-ing force in his youngest child. She had been away from home for nearly three years, this pretty brown haired girl with the deter-mined face and graceful carriage, and the father secretly admired and almost feared her. A wealthy and childless aunt in the city had besought Jennie to share her home, and Hiram Olcott's pretty daughter, though clinging to the farm, with all its dear memories of childhood and childhood's joys, chose wisely when she yielded to her aunt's request. It was better, far better, for her, for even after her going there were plenty of children to keep the miserly old farmer in a perpetual grumble about money matters.

It was May, and the country wore one glad smile, and Jennie hailed with delight the prospect of a visit to her home, assuming very willing-ly the responsibility of housekeeping while her two unmarried sisters attended the wedding of a cousin in a distant town. This morning she was cooking and with her sleeves rolled above her elbows stood beside the litchen table. In one hand she held an earthen plate, while the clip, clip, clip, clip of a fork sounded noisily as she whipped some eggs to a froth.

"Your sisters hed to marry to suit him," wailed the nervous little woman, "an' you'll hev to too. Ef you don't, there be awful fusses, so you'd jest better give in." That morning the father had spoken to Jennie of a young farmer, whom he termed a "likely catch." She had expressed her opinion of him in so decided a way as to alarm

Mr. Olcott for the safety of his much prized authority.

He was wont to speak of himself as a marvelous example of the patriarch. "Make 'em mind," he would say. "Keep your household beneath your feet; govern 'em well, an' they'll git along. Jennie's boldness in opposing his judgment so stupefied him that his inger had not yet had time to blaze forth, but Mrs. Olcott knew it would come, and so after her husband had left the kitchen she pleaded with the girl to "give in." Jennie had been very thoughtful during the little woman's appeal, but now she was resolved, and it was the Olcott in her nature which spoke. "I would not marry Jordan Moggs though father should threaten to murder me."

The eggs were stiff now, and as she set the plate down on the table she turned from her mother and busied herself among the ingredients for cake baking which were before her. Jennie was blushing as she began softly, "There is some one in Poole I like very much, mother, and he's coming out here to"-"He needn't mind comin'," said

Farmer Olcott grimly as he stepped quietly into the kitchen. "Don't let me ketch none o' your city fellers comin' to see you. Ef they do, I'll talk to 'em. Not a word now," he growled, shaking his long finger menacingly at Jennie as she essayed to speak. "I'm master in my own house, an' you'll not talk till such time as I'm done. You've been away an' kinder forgot how things is run here, but you might as well get broke in now. I tell you I won't hev any city fellers a-follerin' you, an' ef I ketch your Aunt Kate makin' matches fur you I'll jest fetch you home from bein' a fine lady down there an' set you workin'."

Before Jennie could speak he had gone into the dining room, slam-ming the door behind him.

Tears of mortification and rage stood in her brown eyes, and hot words leaped to her ips, but as she glanced down at the agonized face of the little woman beside her the flerce mood changed. She bent to kiss the pain drawn lips, murmur-ing: "Never mind, mother dear. I'll be patient for your sake."

"That's a good girl, Jennie," replied Mrs. Olcott, with a sigh of relief. "Try an' git along peaceable like an' jest give in far the sake of quiet. Your pa's gettin' was an'

Jennie wrote a partial account of what had occurred to her Aunt Kate, and this was the answer of that clever woman:

his Dear Nico-Your father needs managing, and I will undertake to do it. I have written to him to come down to the city and notice me shout the rale of a place of property, and you need not be curprised at anything that happens.

Mrs. Kate Calding was the only one in the world who ever did understand her brother Hiram, and she had planned a clever little ruse to be played on the unsuspecting fourth. The entire number of cows

Mr. Bryan, whom Jennie had confessed to her mother she cared a great deal for, was well suited to her. He had not yet declared his | The Way in Which Many New York love, but it was not unguessed by the shrewd little maiden. To Mrs. Calding, however, he had opened his heart, and she bade him wait a lit-tle. She knew how prejudiced her brother was against all arrangements not conducted by himself and rightly concluded that he might put serious difficulty in the way of the young people. After satisfying herself that the name of Jennie's lover was quite unknown to her brother she resolved to introduce him as a young man who would be a good match for Jennie if only the girl could be wise enough to think so.

Allowing him to believe they had never met, she trusted to his unequaled obstinacy to do the rest.

"I've wanted so much to talk with you about Jennie," said that lady as she and Hiram sat in her well appointed drawing room the night of the arrival.

"Yes, an' I'm willin'. She ought to be settled," said the old man decidedly. .

"It does not do, Hiram," began Mrs. Calding, watching the hard lined face intently, "to depend on a girl's choice, and"— "Well, I guess it don't," he interrupted, with a sneer.

There is a young man in town who I know admires Jennie, and if he should meet her I think some-thing would come of it." Very quietly, yet with the utmost caution she made this statement. The old man was interested.

"Rich?" he inquired, rubbing his hands gently together.
"Yes," was the answer. Then she

"Of course it's so very uncertain, Hiram. You see, Jennie might refuse to have a word to say to him,

"Now, Kate, look here," inter-rupted the thoroughly excited old man as he drew his chair nearer hers and emphasized his words with decisive gestures, "ef I like that young man I'll jest take him out home with me, an' I'd like to see Jennie tell him to go ef I'm livin'."

Mrs. Calding was delighted at her success thus far. The next day Mr.

Bryan was introduced and become

Bryan was introduced and became the old man's ideal of a son-in-law. On the farmer's return to his home Mr. Bryan accompanied him, having accepted the hearty invita-tion of his new friend to "jest run out an' take a look around our part of the country."

Jennie had been apprised of Mr.

Bryan's coming and of the little deception in which she was to play her part. She met him as if he were a stranger, while her father secretly rejoiced at the thought of subduing his proud young daughter. Mr. Olcott took an early opportunity to enlighten Jennie as to her duty toward his new friend, and with a twinkle in her eye she prom-ised to do her best to please him in the matter.

Bryan were very happy. The days were delightful ones to them, and the old farmer rubbed his hands at the success of his scheme and gave his consent to an early marriage with no hesitation. He often speaks now of his matchmaking. "There's Jennie," he will say. "She'd hev picked up with some empty noddled city chap ef I hadn't jest took her in hand. I brung Bryan out an' told her that she'd got to behave to him. It's the only way to do-jest make 'em mind. an' they'll git along." They would not deceive him for anything, the happy young couple, but when he boasts they think with loving gratitude of clever Aunt Eating Too Much. Eating too much is a disease of civilization. The uncivilized seldom get too much to eat, or their feastings are preceded or followed by so many days of famine that gormandizing leaves no evil trace. Where food is abundant, oxygen scarce, muscles soft through inactivity and the regular occupation a tax upon the brain and nerves the feeling that one has eaten too much or has not eaten enough is a frequent and troublesome intruder. At times there is a combined sense of being at once ill nourished and overfed. This means simply that one has eaten too much of improper foods and not enough of the right ones. A famous rule for the cure of dyspep-sia is simple and succinct—"Take on your plate all you mean to eat and eat but twice a day."—Good Housekeeping.

A LITTLE BOY'S LIFE SAVED .-] have a few words to say regarding Chamberlain's Cough Remedy. It saved my little boy's life and I feel that I cannot praise it enough. I bought a bottle of it from A. E. Steer, of Goodwin, S. D., and when I got home with it the poor baby could hardly breathe. I gave the medicine as directed every ten minutes until he "threw up," and then I thought sure he was going to choke to death. We had to pull the phlegm out of his mouth in great long strings. I am positive that if I had not got that bottle of cough medicine my how would tle of sough medicine my boy would not be on earth to-day.—JOEL DE-MONT. Inwood, Iowa. For sale by Orr-Gray Co.

MAKING A MILLION.

Fortunes Were Started.

If you had not a cent in the world and wanted to be a millionaire, how would you set about to be one? Would it occur to you to buy an unimproved plot of ground up town on credit, a building lot all covered with recks and thistles, tin cans and old shoes and the ashes from the neighborhood stoves? Some men would consider themselves still worse off with the lot to pay for than when they were simply pennitheir moneyed careers in just that way. First they got a building lot "on tick." Then they dug a cellar, also "on tick." The moment they had the hole dug they could borrow money to build the first story of a house. The moment the first story was up they could borrow more money with which to add a second story. With the completion of each new story more capital was obtainable, and so the house was finished or credit. At this stage they were still penniless, but owed for a building lot and a fine building. Then they sold the building for as much more than it cost as they could get, and the balance of profit was the nest egg of their fortune.

This mode of getting rich is being practiced all around us every day by many men.

It accounts for the hundreds, perhaps thousands, of handsome large apartment houses we see decorating all the upper avenues on this island. -Julian Ralph in New York Mail and Express.

Had Thought Him In the Pale. The quaint sayings of little folk furnish an abundant supply of amusing anecdotes. A Baltimore lady, an Episcopalian, relates the following story, which she declares is authentic:

"Mrs. J. of Georgia, a relative of a prominent bishop of the Episcopal church, had a little daughter who had just begun to attend school.
Mrs. J. was herself a devout Episcopalian, and her little one had been carefully trained.

"One day the child returned from school almost in tears. She said a little Jewish girl in her class had treated her badly, and she began to speak slightingly of her school-mate's race, when her mother said reprovingly:

"'My dear, you must not talk in that way. The Jews were God's

The Hardest Working Animal.
As regards physical work, a term which must be taken to include endurance, it would be difficult to decide between the claims of the horse and the camel. As regards carrying power a horse in fair condition will carry 250 pounds over twenty-five miles of road in eight hours, while a camel will carry a weight of 1,000 pounds over twenty-five miles of desert daily for three days. A horse succumbs in from four to five days without drinking. The camel begins work in its fourth year and goes on in increasing strength and endurance for about fifty years, while the average of a horse's working life is sixteen. On the whole, then, counting actual work performed and power of endurance, the balance appears to rest on the camel.

German Army Marriages.

Army and navy officers in Germany are not allowed to marry unless they have a certain private income and must make a deposit of 30,000 marks cash ($7,500) with the government before the marriage can take place. This is deposited to their credit in the public treasury, and they receive 3 per cent interest per year. At the death of the officer the principal is refunded to his family. The purpose of this rule is to protect the government from the burden of destitute officers' families and also to protect the officer against court martial, for the regulations prohibit him from incurring

Unequal Eyes.

Unless you happen, says The Family Doctor, to be the one person out of every fifteen who has eyes of equal strength you are either left eyed or right eyed. You also be-long to the small minority of one out of every ten persons if your left eye is stronger than your right. As a rule, just as people are right handed, they are right eyed. This is probably due to the generally greater use of the organs of the right side of the body.

THE DRUM WAS SILENT.

And the Drummer Was Excused on Account of Sickness.

The torn and tattered remnant of Confederate regiment one day toward the close of the war was lined up by its colonel and told that the commanding general was to pay a "visit of inspection" on the following day. The soldiers were admonished to "do their prettiest."

"Just brace up as though your clothes were brand new uniforms and as though you had the best on earth to eat and plenty of it. We haven't any bugles left, but Smith there has got a drum, and it's a plumb fine one—big as a barrel. Now, Smith, when I give you the There are men in New York city word tomorrow you let her go for who are very rich and who began all she's worth." Thus spoke the colonel.

The next day came the general to "inspect" the poor, half starved fighters, and as he appeared in the distance the colonel gave the order to "line up." As the commanding officer drew near the colonel shouted, "Now, Smith, let her go!" and turned to salute the general.

But not a note came from the big barrel drum. The colonel, red in the face, turned toward the drummer and again shouted his order for "music."

But still the drum remained as mute as the harp of Tara's Hall Infuriated at this open disobedience of orders, and in the presence of his commanding officer, too, the colonel rode down the line and as he reached the refractory drummer cried out: "Say, Smith, what do you mean by not beating that blankety blank drum?" "I can't, colonel," whispered

Smith. "The old drum is full of chickens, and half of 'em are for The colonel paused but a moment before he shouted so that the general and the soldiers might hear:

Overeating-What is it?

Overeating is an elastic term. 'According to Good Housekeeping, "to fly into a rage or to give way to prostrating grief is to turn the chief of secretions into a more or less active poison. Concentrated thought or strenuous muscular exertion immediately before or after a meal will make the partaker of a light lunch guilty of overeating. "In its effects undereating is worse than overcating. There are a few things of which it is very difficult to eat too much-dead ripe blackberries, pears or peaches picked from the trees in a state of absolute ripeness, sweet apples that are mellow through and through and grapes as sweet as honey."

Range of the Eye.

About 200 miles in every direction is the distance a man can see when standing on a clear day on the peak of the highest mountain—say at a height of 26,668 feet, or a little over five miles above the level of the sea. An observer must be at a height of 6,667 feet above sea level to see objects at a distance of 100 miles. The distance in miles at which an object upon the surface of the earth is visible is equal to the square root of one and a half times the height of the observer in feet above the sea level.
