A glorious rain fell here Sunday, which, of course, was very gladiy wellowed, as crops were needing rain very much. A fine crop will be realized if good seasons continue on for the next month, and the farmers are feeling hopeful of better times in the near future. In fact, it has seems evident that the majority of the laboring class of people are contemplating better days. We long for the time when prosperity may abound all o'er this broad universe. Then doubtless happiness and contentment will prevail in every humble cottage.

The dear candidate is feeling hopeful also, for he is at the mercy of the people just now, and earnestly contends for votes sufficient to satisfy his desire—"office." At last we have ten for the House, and, also, how sad some will be made to feel "after the returns," for there will be "five that were wise and five foolish."
