AN ODD COLLECTION.

Why a Book Lover Buys Old Bibles and Hymnbooks.

"All book collectors have their weaknesses," remarked a man who is often seen poring over the sidewalk counters of secondhand bookshops, "and mine, I confess, runs in the line of old Bibles and hymnbooks. Not particularly because they are Bibles and hymnbooks, but because I simply can't stand it to see such books tossed about as dusty, almost worthless secondhand goods. Except in the case of rare old Bibles or quite ancient hymn-books, such books cost but a trifle. Religious books, as a rule, are almost unsalable in secondhand shops, and I buy a great many; only, however, such as contain family names and inscriptions of pathetic charac-

"My first purchase of the kind was an Episcopal prayer book, battered and torn, with the name of an old friend of mine in gilt on the cover. It gave me a shock to find it on a secondhand counter, so I paid the required dime and carried it home. The man is dead, and his children are living in other cities. well to do. I have no idea how his prayer book became public property. People are queer. I offered it to a remote relative of the former owner, but she said she didn't care about it. Since then I have bought in other old family Bibles and hymnbooks which belonged to people I had known or which contain interesting written matter. It is pitiful to see a Bible inscribed, To my dear son Henry, from his devoted mother,' or, 'Elizabeth, from a loving father.' or, 'Little William's birthday gift to Uncle William.

"When these books come into my hands. I erase or tear out the inscriptions, and if my shelf of old Bibles and hymnbooks ever gets started out again as 'religious junk' it will all be anonymous and wanting in that distressing quality which has made me perhaps absurdly sentimental over it." — Detroit Free Press.

Argument From Precedent.

Lincoln was once arguing a case against an opponent who tried to convince the jury that precedent is superior to law and that custom makes things legal in all cases. Lincoln's reply, given in Miss Ida Tar-bell's life of the great war president, was one of his many effective analogies in the form of a story. Lincoln told the jury that he would argue the case in the same way as his opponent and began: "Old Squire Bagly, from Menard came into my office one day and

"'Lincoln, I want your advice as a lawyer. Has a man what's been elected justice of the peace a right to issue a marriage license? "I told him not, whereupon the old squire threw himself back in his chair very indignantly and said:

"Lincoln, I thought you was a lawyer. Now, Bob Thomas and me had a bet on this thing, and we agreed to let you decide; but if this is your opinion I don't want it, for I know a thunderin' sight better. I've been a squire eight years and have done it all the time."

Not His Fish That Was Spoiled.

He dined wherever mealtime found him and in consequence in many different restaurants. It had become a habit to notice the dish which most of the other diners had and to order it. In this particular restaurant a fish dinner seemed to be the proper thing. An old man at the next table was particularly enjoying his fish. Presently the waiter brought the stranger his portion. He looked askance, sniffed freely and remarked to the waiter: "I say, this fish does not seem to be quite fresh."

"Oh, yes, sir; yours is all right," said the waiter. "It's the other old gent's what's off color." And he motioned with his thumb to the ravenous one near by.-New York Tribune.

A Devoted Couple.

Mrs. Hartt-Yes, I have no doubt there are unhappy marriages, but really I cannot understand how they are possible. Now, there's George and I. We are so devoted. He says he could not exist without me, and I'm sure I live only for him.

Mrs. Greene—You really are to be congratulated, both of you. By the way, how long have you been married?

Mrs. Hartt—Just a week day after tomorrow.—Boston Transcript.

Can't Fool the Sex.

A young lady from London was visiting for the first time a country farm. Seeing a cow looking very savage, she said to an old farmer, "Oh, how savage that cow looks!"

"Yes, miss, it's the red parasol you are carrying," said the farmer. "Well," she said, "I knew it was a trifle rout of fashion, but I never thought a country cow would notice it."—Tit-Bits.

Plants really are living beings, the same as animals, and, like the latter, they are obliged to absorb nourishment to develop them and to remain alive. But since they cannot, as do the beings of superior species, go in search of this nourishment, most of them depend on their leaves to draw moisture from the air and their roots to absorb food from the earth. Some, however, do not content themselves with the food obtained in this way from the earth and air. They vary their diet with a little aniplants is the Venus' fly trap, which is common in North Carolina. All its leaves radiate from the root and from a spread-out rosette. A strong vein stiff, spiny hairs. Each half of the leaf presents a slightly concave surface, strewn with glands. These glands distill a liquor which attracts insects. The stiff hairs on the edges are placed in such a manner that the insect which hovers near the leaf is almost certain before long to touch one of the hairs. And, as these are endowed with a great irritability, when ther are touched the two lobes of the leaf close quickly, one shutting against the other, and paper, and call a convention of my they interlace their spiny lashes so firmly that the prey which they have seized cannot escape. So long as the insect struggles, the leaves remain closed. As soon as it ceases to move the lobes open lightly. The leaf secretes a digestive juice similar to the gastric juice of the human stomach, and the prey is slowly dissolved and

In France there is a plant found frequently in marshy places which is named the Rossolis. It has the same properties as the Venus. Its leaves are covered with thick hairs, the transparent glands of which resemble small drops of dew. They close up if an insect touches them, but if a bit of mineral substance is placed on them neither the leaves nor hairs make a movement. It is only when an insect touches them that they close up.

Another plant, the darlingtonia, feeds on insects, but in a different way. Its leaves form a species of urn, which ordinarily holds some water. On the inside there is also some honey, which attracts the insects. These unhappy animals slip at the smooth incline, fall to the bottom and cannot get up again, for there are sharp hairs that are directed from the top toward the bottom to prevent them.

Little by little the plant absorbs it has an advantage over the latter. It can save its food if it does not wish to eat at once. Its urn is a larder, in which it can heap its provisions up. the provision is too abundant for its consumption the dead insects give birth to a great quantity of larvae, which grow and develop quickly in this leafy medium and offer for the choice food-tender, fresh and re-

Another plant is the serpentaire, whose large funnel-shaped flower exhales an insupportable deadly odor, which attracts flies from a distance. They precipitate themselves to the bottom of the tube of the flower which secretes the sickening juice and die there. Then the serpentaire, like the Venus, absorbs and devours them.

"I never saw so much money in all my before, and I never saw as many receipts and due bills and things of that sort at any one time before," observed the Bohemian who was regaling his friends, "and it all came about in this way: I had gone out to the races, and everything seemed to drift my way. Riley Grannan, in the very zenith of his fame as a better, did not approximate the daring and the luck which compassed this one's experience. I simply played with the wise men who figure out the percentages from mal food. The most remarkable of the form sheets, and singularly I was these carnivorous or animal-eating playing against the judgment of the bookmakers all the time. Horses booked at 100 to 1, and at even longer odds, called for my money. I was doing something I never did before, extends from the base to the summit, playing long-shot horses, and betting and their edges are furnished with to the last penny in my pocket. I won every time. I hauled my money home in a furniture car. Then a good impulse came to me. I intended to found a few orphan asylums, endow educational institutions in several parts of the country, and do other philanthropic work. But the first thing to do was to pay all my creditors. It would take too much time to call on each one of them, so I concluded that I would rent a hall, insert an advertisement in a morning newscreditors. I rented a big hall, and called on all my creditors to meet me. They were there on time. The hall was jammed. The meeting will please come to order,' says I. 'My fellowcitizens,' says I, 'this is the proudest moment of my life,' says I, and they cheered me lustily, 'I am here to pay my honest debts,' says I, and the gentleman from Missouri got the floor. I announced that I would like to take my creditors up alphabetically, if would like to pay my more recent obligations first. The fellows who held claims that were barred by the statute of limitation, were inclined to object to this, but when I told them there was no danger of any man being shut out they subsided, and the merry work went on. I never saw so many 'received-in-fulls' in my life, and in a with receipts, and I was simply ticktickled as I was over the situation. Finally the last receipt had been me, so I felt, to thank my creditors meeting in convention at my request, and to make a few complimentary remarks on the mutuality of the good them, just as does the Venus. But fortune which had fallen upon me. I forming a bountiful reserve on which gavel down with a good hard rap as I repair. it may draw when it is hungry. If said it. I once heard of a minister who boasted from his pulpit that he was able to preach from any text in the Bible off-hand, without thought or other preparation, and as a test of his talent in extemporaneous speaking, he invited his congregation the next Sunday to hand in any text they would like him to preach from, when he would show them what he was able to do. In order that he might not be suspected of surreptitious preparation, the passages of scripture to be written upon slips of paper, sealed up in envelopes and placed upon the pulpit immediately before the ser-

The next Sunday morning the pastor came bounding in, pride and confidence gleaming in his eyes, and found a number of sealed envelopes lying upon the big Bible. After the preliminary service he called attention to them, and said he would preach from the text contained in the envelope that lay on the top of the pile. The remainder he would reserve for future Sabbaths. Tearing it open he unfolded a slip of paper and read the words, once addressed to the prophet Balaam: "Am I not thine ass?"-W. E. Curtis, in Chicago Record-Herald.

How Long do Brunkards Live!

More interesting and remarkable, perhaps, than any other disclosure made by Dr. Dana are those relating to the capacity of men for drink and the duration of life among habitual inebriates. On the latter point the conclusions reached are that in serious cases the duration of life is about fifteen years-the maximum being over 40 years. In general, it is said that hard drinking can rarely be carried on for more than twenty years, and it generally brings the victim to grief about the age of 40. Referring to persons who drink most heavily and frequently, it is said that it takes ten or fifteen years to bring on dementia or fusanity, during which time it may be estimated that each inebriate consumes about 2,000 gallons of intoxicants. A man 55 years old confessed to Dr. Dana that he had been drunk twice a day for three years, making about 2,000 intoxications; another man of 40 had been drunk weekly for 20 years, and a third, aged 43, had been drunk a thousand times in fifteen years. 'Two thousand drunks is set down as the maximum limit in any ordinary inebriate experience. The favorite combination for hard drinkers was found to be beer and whiskey, and beer alone came well up in the scale. Other beverages used by inebriates included cocoa, wine, Jamaica ginger, tincture of soap and a well known proprietary "bitters." A remarkable absence of alcoholism was found in wine drinkers.-Leslie's Weekly.

Nose Rebuilt with Paraffine.

Surgery has made such rapid strides within the last decade that it is impossible to predict where its limit lies, as was again illustrated at the city hospital yesterday. In a few there was no objection, and that I days, when the friends of Maud Frazer visit her again they will scarcely recognize her in the comely girl artistically rejuvenated by the surgeon's

Maud Frazer was a pretty girl, but for one feature, and that was her nose. When admitted just a week ago from her home at 1555 Linn street that prominent adjunct to a pretty face short while I was almost covered up was all awry. In early infancy she became afflicted with catarrh, which led to death. It was a novel thing, in its intensity caused the nasal bones and my creditors seemed to be as much | to decay, and as the necrosis develop ed they had to be removed. Strange to say, the outer skin was never afhanded in and it was incumbent on feeted, but as the mainstay-the bridge and cartilage-wasted away the for their leniency in the past, and for nose finally collapsed like a balloon from which the air was exhausted. A creditors, but I'll be d-d if I can practical knowledge, rather than surgical skill was here necessary to devise the means and the staff physician in charge of the case has both. He decided to resort to par fin, the same article from which candles are made. Only in this case the useful product was sterilized and purified that it might carry no disease germs with it. After it had undergone this process it was reduced to a semi-liquid form. and kept so over a regulated lamp. When all was ready for the operation the girl's face was also carefully sterilized, and then an antitoxin syringe was brought into requisition. Filled with parassin, the needle of the syringe was then inserted under the skin just where the eyebrows divide, the paraffin slowly injected between the skin and tissue. Slowly the bulbous nose began to form into its former contour, and after the third injection it looked like a well-developed nose, aquiline, and without its former defects. With his other hand the surgeon kneaded and shaped it until its form was perfect and the operation was completed. In less than 24 hours the paraffine will have hardened to the consistency of the cartilage that occupied the space before, and to all intents and purposes Miss Frazer will have a shapely nose for the rest of her days .- Cincinnati Enquirer.

Getting an Egg in China.

An English traveler who has visited every nation in the world, is authority for the statement that one food is universal throughout all countries. "There is not a part of the world," he says, "where you cannot get an egg." While in Western China, however, he at first had some difficulty in getting even eggs. The natives could not not understand him and refused to recognize the pictures he drew as pictures of eggs. "The way I got out of the difficulty," he adds, "was that I squatted down on - During the past twenty-five years he'd been asleep in a folding bed and my haunches, flapped my wings and cock-a-doodle-doo'd until the entire - The man who doesn't secure the nation grasped what I wanted, and I of eggs.'

When Roosevelt was Challenged.

The President of the United States might once have made his appearance on the "field of honor." So, at least, one of the men who knew him when he was a pale, delicate youth in the West has just been telling in some early recollections of Mr. Roosevelt. A fire-eating foreign marquis, who owned land on both sides of the Roosevelt ranch, was offended at certain alleged tresspassings on his land, and threatened to kill young Roosevelt on sight. Roosevelt made inquiries of the overseer as to when the killing was to begin, and then came a letter from the marquis declaring that "between gentlemen such differences could be settled in only one way."

Mr. Roosevelt went to one of his men and said, "I don't want to disgrace my family by fighting a duel, but I won't be bullied. Now, as I am the challenged party, I have the privilege of naming weapons. I am no swordsman, and pistols are too uncertain, so I will meet him with Winchester rifles at 10 paces; both to fire until one drops." The result was a denial on the part of the marquis that he intended to challenge Mr. Roosevelt, and a statement that he thought their differences could be settled without any trouble .- London Chronicle.

A North Side boy, 5 years of age, who had recently become the brother of another little boy, was sent to the grocery the other day to get some loaf sugar. By mistake the grocer gave him granulated, and the boy was sent back to have it changed.

"How do you like your new brother?" asked the grocer, as he was weighing the right kind of sugar. "Oh, I don't like him very much," the little fellow answered. "He cries all the time." "Why don't you change him, then, as you do the sugar?"
