IN WARTIME

Like Rasselas, the Abyssinian, we lived the balmy days "only to know the soft vicissitudes of pleasure and repose." We wandered "in gardens of fragrance and slept in fortresses of security," but like all pleasure seekers we were now weary of the monotonous round of uneventful days, and former delights grew stale. Gentle Mrs. Gray and Miss Harland, the invalid whose thin, scarlet cheeks and bright eyes told too plainly the presence of the destroyer, the quiet rector and the somewhat pompous major, with his little blond wife, made up our party. "Some one tell a story, please, cooed the pretty blond, tossing aside "Hero Worship." "Who ever knew a live hero?" she laughingly asked.
"I," promptly answered Mrs.

Gray.
"How delightful! Do tell us about him. Who was he?" "The only true hereism that ever came under my immediate notice," said the little woman, "was displayed by a hero of abon hue, a strong young Hercules, who, though rough and untaught, possessed a grand

"Yes," assented the sentimental major, "often among the humblest flowers we find the rarest odors." resumed Mrs. Gray, "among the busy workers, with hardened hands and toil stained faces, we find great hearts. During the late war," she continued, "my father and brother were in the army, and, the overseer being drafted into service, my mother, my sister and myself were compelled to leave our beautiful home in the city and go up the river to the plantation to manage as best we could the affairs of that place.

"Our people were trustworthy and kind, so we had but little trouble. A few weeks after our arrival at the plantation our hearts were saddened by the death of a much loved servant. Rachel was her name. She had nursed my mother's older children, and we were all very much attached to her. Rachel died suddenly of heart trouble, the physician said, and her little children were cared for by a good old granny. Albert, the husband of Rachel, was a field hand and a reliable man."

"Of what time do you speak?" "This was in the spring of 1864. The transmississippi department was under the command of the Confederate General E. Kiroy Smith. The struggle east of the Mississippi river had drawn from us the chivalry of the great southwest. The sons of Arkansas, Mississippi, Louisiana and Texas were scattered from Gettysburg to Vicksburg, and a diminished force composed of the fathers and husbands was left to meet the gathering foe that threatened, with General Steele at Little Rock and General Banks at Alexandria,

La. The conscript bureau had gleaned the fields of the last of the bearded grain, and nothing was left but 'the flowers that grew between—the boys too young to go.

"Then a new order came, and the men slaves were impressed and sent to the shops as laborers and teamsters in the various departments to sters in the various departments to fill such places as they could in order that for every slave so employed a soldier could be relieved and go to the front. The burden of feeding and clothing the army devolved upon the women of the south. Cheerfully and with untold sacrifices did they do their part. Our fices did they do their part. Our people did not escape the impressment law."

"Ercuse me, but whom do you mean by 'our people?" chirped the beauty from the ham nock.

"We called our slaves 'our people," responded Mrs. Gray, with a smile. "They were impressed into service and sent to Shreveport, La., to work. Among the men was one who had been married only a year. He objected to leaving his wife and baby. Jake was his name. While they were discussing the question among themselves Albert presented himself at the dining room door.

"Good mawnin', mistis,' he said,

"'Gawd bress mistis!' cried a chorus of a hundred voices as they marched away.

"In those turbulent times there were no established mail routes in our country. Indeed, the receipt of a letter was quite an event. For two months we heard nothing of our men. Then one ran away from Shreveport and came home more dead than alive. Of the hundred who had gone from our plantation twenty-two had died. Albert had been detailed on hospital duty, and before another month had passed he, too, had given up the burden of life. Good, faithful Albert! Though A subscription list will be circulated he lives neither in song nor story, his was as grand a heroism as was ever-recorded. His Rachel waited just within 'the big, white gates,' and waited not in vain."

Mrs. Gray had "tears in her voice" as she concluded her pathet-

"We brush the skirts of martyrs and tread the path with heroes are all unmindful, but God noteth all and will reward as surely as the day followeth the dark night," reverently spoke the white haired rector as we sat silent and thoughtful.

"And it's just as near heaven by way of Silvandale as home," mur-mured the invalid, folding her light wrap closer about her.

"And what a harsh, unpleasant jargon he makes of it, too," remarked gon he makes of it, too," remarked a woman customer when given this information by a fancier, adding, "Naturally!" Whereupon her escort retorted, "You may be sure the others make up for it in parrot talk, and pro ably poor Jack has to hear more than many of his human brothers in affliction." Then he remained quite silent while the woman bought an expensive male bird, extra volubility warranted. extra volubility warranted, and ordered the bill sent in his name.— New York Tribune.

"Old Greg." The sailer's word "grog" got its origin from Admiral Vernon of the British navy, who was known as "Old Grog" because his favorita elothing was of grogram, a fabric of silk and moheir. The old sea dog punished his sailors for depeliction of duty by diluting their daily ration of liquez with much water.

Three Eels and a Girl.

There lives a family on Delaware place with a palate for cels. As often as twice a week the head of the family carries home from the fish market two or three of the slippery, snakelike wrigglers. He usually returns home late at night, and it is his custom to put the eels in a bucket of water, where they are kept until mornriously injured and disabled through

One night last week the man of the house took home three cels. After stumbling about the darkened house in a futile search for a bucket, he hit a pivot. This iron column, driven by upon another plan. He tiptoed to the steam power, can attain a great rate of bathroom and turned the eels loose in speed and the platform revolves swiftthe bathtub.

As soon as the house was quiet the younger of the two sisters, dressed for her dreams, stole out of her room with a heavy crash towel thrown across her arm, and proceeded to the bathroom. The room was dark and she could find no matches. Not caring to search for a match she decided to bathe in the thumps are received before one learns dark, and accordingly turned on the Lot and cold water. When the tub was well filled the young woman stepped in. The hot water had put life into the slippery eels, and when the young woman got both feet into the tub the creatures slipped about her ankles and across her feet.

That was all she remembered. With one hysterical scream she began kicking furiously and crying for help. Her elder sister, fearing she was being murdered, ran to the bathroom, but found the door looked. After a couple yet been selected, but the Big Four of moments had elapsed, the girl imprisoned in the bathroom fell out of the tub and managed to unlock the door. Not hearing the anxious questions her frightened sister was crying at her, she fairly flew down the hallway, clad only in the darkness.

The whole family was aroused by the screams, and lights flared up in every apartment in the big building. The women of the house and the elder sister, after fifteen minutes work, succeeded in calming the frightened bath-

Locomotives Easy to Kill.

The Union Papific Railroad company has just discovered that it is being made the victim of union men masquerading in the guise of strike breakers. They secure employment as machinists in the railroad shops affected by the strike and take advantage of the opportunities thus efforded to disable the company's enginer.

"To the man who knows his business," said an engineer, "it is not difficult to turn the trick. Notwithstanding the fact that an engine is a powerful looking monster, there are many places about it where the removal of a little burr of the size of the end of your finger will put it out of order, and an expert will be puzzled for hours to discover the reason.

"Half a bar of soap will kill a locomotive. A package of washing compound will do it just as effectively. Either one dropped in the water tank will be sufficient to turn the water into suds, and you couldn't get up steam to save your life.

Another easy bit of mischief that s being practiced in this strike is to sidle up to a locomotive when she is at the station and place a bolt on the under piston guide. The first revolution crushes it against the cylinder, between it and the knuckle of the piston. The trouble is, however, that ton. The trouble is, however, that it wont crush, but tears out the whole side.

"There is a small valve used to permit the escape of air when the brakes are released. It is no difficult job, especially at night, to put a little plug in this valve. The air is not strong enough to eject it, and as a result the set wheels slide along until they are flat-footed.

"The dangerous plan of mixing explosives with the coal is seldom followed. It knocks the engine out of working order, but the explosion is likely to injure the engineer or fireman, and with them usually the machinists or boiler makers have no quarrel. There are many intricate working parts about the engine that can be thrown of adjustment by some working parts about the engine that can be thrown of adjustment by some obstruction, or by the application secretly of emery that will simply wear the pieces until they no longer work together.—Lincoln, Neb.. dispatch of November 8.
