CURES RHEUMATISM.

Rheumatism, which does its terrible work in the muscles, joints, and tissues, is caused by the acid which gathers in the blood.

PRICE TAGS ON CLOTHES.

Odd Custom Which Would Seem Suited to Some Americans.

A peculiar custom of the peasantry in remote parts of Italy, according to a correspondent, is the wearing of price tags on new dresses and suits of clothes.

The observer of social conditions may well ask why this custom of wearing price marks on clothes has not found favor in this country.

"Oh, nonsense! It's nothing. I hope I'm always ready to do my friends a turn. But it's no use, is it? It gets worse and worse."

"I'll go," he said, with a sigh. "I won't stay a minute. After what you say I couldn't. And, old man, I don't know how to thank you."

"Oh, you'll soon forget it when you're on the move."

"I'll try it. By Jove, I will!" he exclaimed earnestly.

"Do; it only needs a little resolution, because between ourselves, you know, you oughtn't to be incon-solable."

"Eh?"

"In my opinion, Jack, you've had an escape, and you can take my word for it. Remember, I know the lady pretty well."

"Oh, you mustn't say a word against her," he protested. "She's been all that's good and kind and—"

"Of course you say that," I interrupted impatiently. "I suppose you're bound to; but it won't go down with me. If ever there was a heartless, worthless jade—"

"Bob!" he cried, starting away from me, but I was determined he should hear the truth.

"If ever a woman," I pursued, "led a young fellow on deliberately, wickedly, never meaning anything except to get him in her toils and then turn him adrift with a laugh—"

"You were only the victim," I interrupted, patting his shoulder.

"I-I shall go at once. I can't stay here. This revelation—you are telling me the truth, Bob?"

"Honestly, to the best of my knowledge," I answered firmly.

"How awful!" he said.

"Why, any of the fellows at the club could have told you the same thing."

"Awful!" he murmured, gazing at me.

"Come, come," said I. "It's possible to make too much of such a trouble as this. When one's eyes

A CURE FOR LOVE

It was Kitty who first suggested to me that our prescription was not working smoothly.

"He's getting no good here at all," she said most positively.

"Really, in his own interest, I must ask you to send him away."

"The girl has spoiled his life!" I cried angrily. Kitty looked at me for a moment, but said nothing.

"I suppose you're right," I went on. "He would be better in a livelier place."

"Of course he would, you dear old stupid," said Kitty.

"There is nothing to distract his thoughts here," I said.

"You will speak to him, then?" asked Kitty. She was decidedly in earnest about it.

"A woman does these things so delicately and tactfully," I suggested.

"Oh, I couldn't think of it, Robert," said Kitty, blushing. I admired her delicacy.

"He was walking up and down the gravel walk hitting at my flowers—of which I am rather proud—with his stick and smoking one of my cigars—I'm a judge of cigars—at a ruinous pace.

"Jack," said I, "wouldn't you be better away from here? Come, you know what I mean. You're no great hand at a secret."

"I—I—," he began, stammering and in great confusion.

"I know all about it," said I encouragingly. "I thought you'd get good out of the place, but it's clear you haven't—quite the contrary. You want to see new things and new people and forget this—I paused for a word and ended—"this unhappy mistake of yours."

"Upon my honor, you are a good fellow!" he exclaimed. "I don't know another man who would have treated me as you have."

"Oh, nonsense! It's nothing. I hope I'm always ready to do my friends a turn. But it's no use, is it? It gets worse and worse."

"I'll go," he said, with a sigh. "I won't stay a minute. After what you say I couldn't. And, old man, I don't know how to thank you."

TWO ABUSED WORDS.

An English Writer's Views on the Use of "Former" and "Latter."

I detect them. I should like to banish them from the English language. One of them by itself may be occasionally tolerable, but the two together are unendurable.

The writers of comic verse long ago perceived their absurdity. Arthur Reed Ropes has given us a good example of it in his lines to the "Lost Pleiad."

She had yielded to a mortal when he came to die and slatter. She was Meropé or Steropé, the former or the latter.

Calverley also: One night I saw him squeeze her hand; There was no doubt about the matter; I said he must resign or stand My vengeance, and he chose the latter.

It were perhaps better the point to cite the punning poet who wrote of Xenophon's historic retreat: When over the land and the sea It behoved the ten thousand to scatter, There were some cried, "The former for me."

But the rest cried: "The latter! The latter!" The appreciation of this requires a little strictly Attic salt. At the locus classicus is of course in the "War Song of Dinas Vawr."

The mountain sheep are sweeter. But the valley sheep are fatter; We therefore deemed it meet To carry off the latter.

Seriously, why cannot authors repeat their words instead of using these unnecessary substitutes? Is it thought that such repetition is unpleasing to the ear? To my thinking the very opposite is the truth.

Halte la! We must "hark back" and reconsider the passage. We are then led to the conclusion that by "the latter" is meant the shareholders and by "the former" the board.

But why not so write it like an honest man? "And when a crisis comes the shareholders seldom hesitate to put their interests in the hands of the board."

"Mr. Vincent, sir, has just jumped into the dogcart, sir—it was at the door by your orders—and driven off like mad. He said he was summoned to town, sir."

I sank down in a chair. Presently Kitty came in. She was laughing.

"Oh, dear," she said, "and I thought you were so nice and considerate in pretending not to see it!"

Then I told her the opinion of her and of our domestic happiness which Jack Vincent was carrying away with him. That sobered her, and we began to send telegrams.

"You couldn't have seen much of John while you were engaged," I remarked.

"Oh, but I did," the bride replied. "I used to ride around with him on the front platform at night, and the conductor didn't look."

"Now," said the professor, "suppose you had tried everything which your knowledge of medicine suggested, what would then be your course?"

"After having presented and collected my bill I would advise the patient to take a trip to Europe."

"But suppose you did not succeed in collecting your bill upon its presentation?"

"Then I would stay right with him and depend upon the gratitude of his heirs."—Houston Post.

A curious sight in the streets of Tokyo is to see an old man seated on a smooth piece of ground having round him little piles of sand of different colors—red, blue, yellow, black, etc.

"Father—Why—er—I think it means to separate, my son."

"Father—And when a man separates from his wife does he cleave to her, father?"

"Father—Young man, it's time you were in bed."

"What's the matter?" asked the lawyer's friend. "Been in a railway accident?"

"No; I had a jury case the other day, and in arguing it I bore strongly upon the theory that my client was a fool rather than a criminal."

"I did it so well that he was acquitted and met me outside."—Chicago Journal.

It is seldom that one does not take pride in being smart enough to avoid the misfortunes of one's friends.

A railway collision is the typical bump of destruction.

A JOKE ON FIELD.

President Harrison Enjoyed it, but the Austere Judge Did Not.

For all his ice and chilly quietude President Harrison owned a sense of humor and would now and then get a hold of a joke and treasure it as a schoolboy might an apple, having it frequently out of his pocket to exhibit and admire.

Complaining letters of all sorts come to a president. One day a western marshal grew querulous because an item in his accounts, by which the government was charged with a carriage furnished Field from his hotel to the court, had been disallowed.

The marshal's grief was made the sharper since his fellow marshal of an adjoining state had likewise furnished a carriage for Field when he held court within his district and the charge had been allowed and paid.

Commonly little attention is given to these cries of the wronged beyond what is required to shunt them upon a "proper" official, usually the one against whom complaint is lodged.

The secretary took a look into the riddle and learned that the fortunate one had been sagacious enough to include the carriage for Field in his item of expense "For care and transportation of prisoners."

In that way it was allowed. It used to give Harrison much pleasure to relate this yarn. Field, however, saw nothing funny in it.

It is not only the foreigner learning our language who is confused by the several meanings attached to one word. The little learner of our own land also finds it an additional burden in gaining a knowledge of the mother tongue.

In a childish altercation in a Germantown nursery recently a small boy of three and a half struck his sister, two years old, a severe blow on the head with a tennis racket.

His mother, after bringing the youthful transgressor to a sense of his misdeed, asked him between his sobs:

"Now, Robbie, aren't you sorry you gave your poor sister such a crack on the head?"

Robbie's sobs instantly subsided, and, with his tear stained face full of eagerness, he exclaimed:

"Oh, mamma, let me see the crack!"—Philadelphia Press.

Education and Business. It may as well be admitted that college training doesn't teach a man to keep books or to sell goods.

What education aims to do is to educate—to develop the man, to awaken him to the problems of the world, to widen his horizon.

There is no danger that not enough attention shall be given to commercial development. But there is a possibility that the business man may become narrowed to his task and fail to take an interest in the world of ideas about him.

Education ought not to prevent a man from acquiring the necessary details of business, and it ought to make him a more valuable citizen. That most successful business men believe this is shown by the fact that they are sending their sons to college.—Kansas City Star.

Vine Trimming Clerks. In May of every year the vineries in the neighborhood of East Finchley and Barnet, England, give employment to hundreds of unemployed clerks and salesman who go out from London.

They are engaged in trimming the clusters of vines, removing all ragged edges and tainted fruit. For this labor, which is done in a high temperature, the men receive about $6.75 a week, out of which they pay their own board and lodging.

The vine growers prefer unemployed clerks for this work, which is of a nature too delicate to be undertaken by "horny handed" help.

His Standing. Ysobel Brisket, the acknowledged queen of the smart set in one of Chicago's smartest suburbs, listened but coldly while Lawrence Liver-wurst declared his love.

"How about your amateur standing?" she asked when he was done. "They say you married for money once."

"It was before I was old enough to know better," protested the man humbly.—Puck.

Quite Legal. Judge Jinks—My daughter, wasn't that young Mr. Hughtie who just went out?

Miss Jinks—Yes, sir. Judge Jinks—Did I not issue an injunction against his coming here again?

Miss Jinks—Yes, sir, but he appealed to a higher court, and mamma reversed your decision.
