

VIRGINIA ITEMS.

REARMS CORPUS CASE IN ALEXANDRIA. THOMAS JAVINS, arrested last summer by the United States military authorities, and imprisoned in the slave jail at Alexandria, Va., was brought out the other day before Judge UNDERWOOD on a habeas corpus writ.

The Provost Marshal returned that he held JAVINS by the authority of the President of the United States, whereupon the Judge said that the writ of habeas corpus was not restored by the recent proclamation of President Johnson, and that Captain Hambrick, having merely a return, under oath, that he retained the said JAVINS as a prisoner under the authority of the President of the United States, he was stopped from making any further inquiry into the matter, and therefore remanded JAVINS back to the custody of Captain Hambrick.

JAVINS is charged with having been the partner in the late summer. Judge UNDERWOOD decided, in substance, that the plea of proclamation did not apply to such cases, and remanded the prisoner to custody. He held that this proclamation, in exempting Texas, practically declared that the rebellion continued to exist, and that no such cases as that of JAVINS, even if the proclamation was legal, which is boldly denied by some of the ablest jurists. What renders this decision important is the well known fact that the motion before Judge UNDERWOOD was generally regarded as a feeder. If successful, it would have been immediately followed by an application for a similar writ in favor of Jefferson Davis. It is not doubted that the secession sympathizers in Virginia, and everywhere else, regard Andrew Johnson's people proclamation as a universal pardon, and as merely preparatory to a full forgiveness and release of the chief of the Confederacy. But Judge UNDERWOOD does not seem to be of their mind.

This case has been brought to the notice of the Government and referred to the Attorney-General, who has the matter under consideration. The Washington correspondent of the New York Times, under date of 12th, says: "No respectable jurist here ventures the opinion that the writ of habeas corpus cannot be suspended in a part of the territory of the United States, while it is continued in operation in other parts; and it is confidently believed that the Attorney-General will decide the case directly in opposition to the opinion of Judge UNDERWOOD, as reported in the papers."

A TRAGEDY IN RICHMOND COUNTY. A correspondent of the Fredericksburg Ledger, writing from Warsaw, under date of the 6th, says: "A most horrible tragedy occurred in this county, within a few miles of this place, on Tuesday last, April 2. A man named Julius E. Hall, who has always sustained the highest character in this community, and who was noted for his amiable disposition, butchered in a most horrible manner a negro woman and her three children; the woman still miraculously survives, though she cannot possibly recover. The three children, one a sucking babe, were instantly killed; weapon used, an axe. All were mangled most horribly. Hall was undoubtedly deranged; inquest over the bodies was held, verdict in accordance with the above facts. Hall acknowledged to his father and mother he had committed the act, with the exception of the parties he had killed. Of course he will add that the witnesses at the inquest were examined in the presence of Lieutenant Ayres, the Freedmen's Bureau agent, who was, as he remarked to me, thoroughly convinced of his insanity. I mention this because of the disposition to make capital of every circumstance concerning whites and negroes by that miserable Radical party at the North."

WHITE LABOR IN VIRGINIA. It seems that some of the Virginia planters are experiencing considerable difficulty in obtaining the proper kind of white labor. The Richmond Times, of Saturday, says: "Experiments with Germans, Swedes, Scotch and English as laborers seem, in many instances, to have come to grief. We have heard of a gentleman up on James River who engaged and carried home a number of Swedes who, after having been on board a week or more for three days, went to their employer and told him if he did not send them back to where they came from they would kill him. He sent them. Again, we hear that the German and English laborers who were employed in King George County and in the vicinity of this city, had been on board a week or more, and having made no complaint except that the country was 'too lonesome.'"

THE RECIPROCAL TREATY. The same paper mentions that the British big Star Light, James A. Scott Captain, arrived at Richmond on the 12th inst. which sailed from Halifax in November last with a cargo of fish and other provisions consigned to Messrs. French & Gray. The said brig was to touch at Sheet Island Harbor and then complete her cargo with lumber consigned to Messrs. Castle & Brothers, but owing to the neglect and delay of the Captain the vessel arrived here two months behind time, which has subjected the consignor to many losses on the cargo consigned to him.

The Treaty between the United States and the British Provinces expired on the 17th day of March last. This is the first case of the kind which has occurred in this port, and involves a matter of much interest to the public at large.

Reports have been circulated, says the Times, that a case of cholera had occurred in Richmond. It says the report is entirely unfounded.

DREADFUL TRAGEDY IN PHILADELPHIA. SEVEN PERSONS FRIENDLY MURDERED—FOUR CHILDREN AND THREE ADULTS.

[From the Philadelphia Ledger, April 11.] The most terrible tragedy ever committed in this city was disclosed yesterday afternoon, though believed to have been perpetrated on Saturday last. The victims were Christopher Dearing, a driver, his wife, his four children and his niece, a young woman about 25 years old. Mr. Dearing occupied the rear of a house, some distance from the Police House road, belonging to Mr. Theodore Mitchell, of Philadelphia. He had lived there for several years, and had been a resident of the neighborhood for twelve or fifteen years. Besides his own family, he had a hired man living with him, a German, whose name had been given as John Dearing, and a young boy; also a lad, called Cornelius, 17 years old, who was bound to Mr. Dearing, and had been with him seven or eight years.

The last seen of Mr. Dearing alive was on Saturday last, when he came to the city on business, and called upon Mr. Mitchell, his landlord. After transacting his business, he seems to have made a purchase of some meat, which was found in his wagon, and to have driven to his house with his niece, before referred to, who had been spending a few days at Burlington, with some friends.

Since Saturday all has been quiet at the farm. The neighbors thought it strange that they did not see either the children or the adult members of the family about, but no one undertook to ascertain the reason until yesterday. About two o'clock one of them, a friend of Mr. Dearing, went to the house and found it fastened up. Promptly by curiosity, he raised one of the sashes and entered. No one was within, and, while the interior was not entirely in order, it did not exhibit such unusual disorder as to create suspicion of foul play. The barn and stable were then visited, and in the former the foot of a man was seen protruding from under a pile of hay. The hay was removed and a most shocking sight was presented. Not only was the murdered body of Mr. Dearing uncovered but that of his niece also. Both were in full dress, he having even his gloves on, and both had their heads nearly severed from their bodies.

The pockets of his pantaloons had been turned inside out, and his body had been searched, as if for a money-bell. They had doubtless been carried there and the hay piled over them to prevent immediate discovery. The finding of these bodies led to the belief that the mother and the children had met a similar fate, and a search was at once instituted for them. In the meantime, however, news of the murder had been circulated, and information had been conveyed to the Second District Police-station, and from there, by telegraph, to the Central station. Chiefs Ruggles and Franklin at once repaired to the scene of the tragedy, with High Constable Clark and several other detective officers. Coroner Taylor also was soon at the farm, but before he arrived the other bodies had been found in a corn-crib attached to the barn, the mother and four children all lying together, and all, as Mr. Dearing and niece were, with their throats cut and their bodies concealed under a pile of hay. The mother had, in addition, the top of her head crushed in. Probably a most shocking sight was never seen than the mother and her murdered children, after they had been removed from the crib. One of the children was a mere babe, less than 2 years old, whose innocent face was sufficient, one would have thought, to have moved even the brutal murderer's heart to pity. The victims were of the following ages, as follows: Christopher Dearing, 40 years; Julia his wife, 35 years; Elizabeth Dolan, the niece, 25 years; John Dearing, 8 years; Thomas Dearing, 6 years; Anna Dearing, 4 years; Emily Dearing, 2 years.

The eldest child, William Dearing, was spending a few days with his grandfather, William Dearing, in West Philadelphia. Had he been home, there can not be a doubt but that he would have shared the fate of the other members of the family.

The police made a thorough search of the premises, and found as axe which was bloody, and which had evidently been used by the murderer. The wounds are as follows: Christopher Dearing, 40 years; Julia his wife, 35 years; Elizabeth Dolan, the niece, 25 years; John Dearing, 8 years; Thomas Dearing, 6 years; Anna Dearing, 4 years; Emily Dearing, 2 years.

The supposition was that all of the victims had been carried to the place where they were discovered. The disappearance of the hired man and of the boy Corney has led to suspicions against them. It was at first thought that the boy had been murdered, but a thorough search of the barn and outhouses was made, and no trace of him could be discovered. The hired man had been only a short time with Mr. Dearing, and is not known to many of the neighbors. He is represented to be about 35 years old, stout and muscular, and to have large whiskers. Coroner Taylor had the bodies removed from the farm yesterday afternoon, and the inquest will take place as soon as the preliminaries can be arranged.

Christopher Dearing is represented to have been an intelligent, industrious and reputable citizen. Such is the character Mr. Mitchell, the owner of the farm, gives him, and his neighbors all speak well of him. He at times had considerable money about him, but did not, it is said, keep much about the house, except in cases of necessity.

The country in which the farm is located is a very retired spot, and as the nearest house is nearly a quarter of a mile off, the murderer or murderers had little fear of interruption in their bloody work. The police will leave nothing undone to detect and bring to justice the guilty, and all will express a hope for the speedy success of their efforts.

The scene of the murder was visited by hundreds of persons yesterday afternoon and evening. The belief that the murder was committed on Saturday is strengthened by the fact that a horse and some cattle which had been locked up in the stable and barn were suffering for the want of food and water when discovered. The fact, also, that decomposition had begun, is thought to strengthen, it. The bodies were quite offensive.

A thorough search of the house, barn and grounds was made for some distance around, but, singular to relate, no evidence was seen of any struggle having taken place, nor were there any marks of blood found to tell of the fearful conflict. Mr. Dearing was seemingly struck while facing his murderer, as the only mark sufficient to have been struck upon the forehead, and when prostrate, his throat was cut, like the others, by a blow of an axe.

The more this murder is examined into, the more astounding does it appear. A mother and her four children butchered, the mother and her children being murdered, and the father being murdered, is a deed of the most heinous kind; and then, upon the arrival of the husband and wife, for them to have been dealt with in the same manner, and still no spot of blood in the house or yard. The only rational theory that we hear of is that upon the arrival of Mr. Dearing and his wife, he discovered that his family were not in the house, started to find them, and after leaving the house was met by the murderer and slain. The niece then, it is thought, followed her husband, and was met by the same fiend in human shape and killed in the same manner.

The axe with which, it is thought, the murder was committed, was nearly a new one, and with but little blood upon it, and had the appearance of having been cleaned. The wagon of the murdered man was found in his place under the shed, and the bed which he had purchased under the same name, and was evidently still small with the harness removed from him; in fact, everything about the premises was found to be in perfect order, except in the house. Here there was evidence of close search for valuables—drawers were pulled out, and the top of an old-fashioned clock removed in the pursuit of money.

The news of the murder spread quite rapidly in the lower part of the city and in the neighborhood of the Central station, and created an intense excitement in consequence of its almost unparalleled atrocity.

Mayor McMichael has issued a proclamation offering a reward of $1000 for the apprehension of the murderer or murderers.

Is Cholera Contagious? A very interesting pamphlet from the pen of Dr. Shrimpton, of Paris, has just appeared, on a subject which has for the last half century been a source of immense amount of discussion, namely—Is cholera a contagious malady or not? Dr. Shrimpton pronounces in the most decided manner against the theory of contagion, founding his opinion, first, on his own experience during the ravages of the formidable malady in France in 1832, 1849, 1853, 1854, and lately in 1865; and next, on the facts and observations set forth in the works of several of his learned colleagues who have most frequently had the opportunity of watching the disease in India, where the cholera is not contagious, how is it produced, and in what manner propagated? Dr. Shrimpton on these points expressed himself as follows: "Without pretending to give any absolute decision, for we do not consider ourselves more able than others to penetrate a mystery which has hitherto baffled all inquiry, we feel justified in saying that we attribute the propagation of cholera to an electric action, which acts directly, somewhat in the same manner as lightning, on the nervous system of organic life. We do not require any great cock of modesty to confess that, as to this electric action, we should not be able to demonstrate its existence, but its existence nevertheless appears to us certain; in admitting it we clearly explain to ourselves the character of cholera, its progress, even its propagation: in rejecting it we see only inexplicable enigmas, which become the more and more obscure in proportion as they are more deeply studied. This opinion, moreover, is not ours alone; many eminent physicians share it with us. We should wish all to be well convinced that researches must be made in this direction by those who desire to arrive at a legitimate conclusion as to the mode in which cholera is propagated. With this view we recommend to our readers the following obligations, which we have often repeated, and which they may have made or may make as well as ourselves. The cholera attacks persons the farthest removed from all contact with patients, prisoners in their cells, women closely confined, and sequestered even in houses; isolated individuals at sea and in the desert. No barrier, no quarantine, no sanitary cord can prevent the approach of cholera, whatever care may be taken to keep persons attacked at a distance from the spot where we are. When the disease makes its appearance in a town, either sporadically or after the arrival of an infected person, far from following a regular course and gradually advancing in a particular quarter, from one quarter to another, as healthy persons may chance to come in contact with those having the malady, it strikes, on the contrary, suddenly and simultaneously, on the most opposite points—does not make a second victim in a family where one has already expired, whilst it will carry off several in a family where no signs of the epidemic had appeared, and that in quite a different quarter, often the healthiest or one of the healthiest in the town. Frankly, it seems to us impossible, in presence of facts so positive, repeated daily, and which may be verified by any one, not to attribute the propagation of cholera to some kind of electric action, still unknown, but not the less real, and the more so that the direction and violence of the wind exercise no influence on the extension of this formidable malady. Lastly, we believe that this electrical action, to which we assign the origin of the cholera, is the result of two forces combined, coming at the same time from the atmosphere and the earth—a fact which renders the cholera endemic; we are convinced that the electrical influence affects most seriously those persons whose nervous system of organic life is weakened by moral or physical causes, such as negligence of the ordinary laws for preserving health, sensual indulgence, and, in a word, all those excesses which occasion a grave depression of the vital forces."
