TUESDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 4, 1866.

OUR NEW YORK LETTER. FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

New York, November 29, 1866. Your correspondent is at his post once more. "Moultre" is back in New York. "Richard's" himself again, and his board bill has begun anew. I need not tell you that the good old Quaker City brought me safely over the boom of the deep blue, or blue deep sea, for it is well known that whenever I travel by water I fight it out on but one line, and that is the LEARY Line. There were but few lady passengers on board, and so good Captain West's occupation was almost gone; nevertheless, to keep his hand in, he treated our correspondent with such politeness—I might almost say gallantry—that said correspondent cannot but here proclaim publicly, that he owes one to the jolly old Captain. I find New York as gay, as crowded, and as noisy as ever. It is rather more lively than the old City by the Sea, notwithstanding the fact that you can now boast a City Railroad almost complete. I note also that there are rather a greater number of theatres and places of amusement here than there were in Charleston when I left.

The great sensation of the moment is EDWIN BOOTH, who opened on Tuesday night, at the Winter Garden, in Hamlet. Those of your many readers who have enjoyed the pleasure of witnessing the performances of this great tragedian in the days before the war, can, nevertheless, form no adequate idea of the wonderful improvement he has made since that period. I had heard so much of his masterly rendition of the role of Hamlet that, when I attended the theatre on Tuesday night, my expectations were raised to the highest possible pitch. I expected to witness a great performance, but I did not expect such acting as eclipses anything I had ever seen on the boards of a theatre. I did not expect to see RACHEL'S "Phedra," RISTORATI'S "Elizabeth," CUSIMANI'S "Mog Merries," MACREARY'S "Hamlet," and FORREST'S "Metamora," thrown entirely into the most obscure shadow of a shade; yet such was the case, for Booth's "Hamlet" is the grandest piece of acting that can be conceived—the most perfect triumph of purely artistic genius. I dare not attempt a detailed criticism where the tout ensemble is, in all respects, as near an approach as possible to perfection as can be conceived. BOOTH does not play "Hamlet"—he does not act the character. We do not see EDWIN BOOTH on the stage, but "Hamlet" himself, the quintessence and personification of melancholy.

I have, in the course of a good many years, been a pretty regular theatre-goer, and have seen good acting in my time; but the performance on last Tuesday night was such as I have never seen equalled. BOOTH'S reception was most enthusiastic. When he first appeared before the audience, the applause was deafening, and was so prolonged that it seemed as though there would be no end thereto; meanwhile the great tragedian, clad in the customary suit of solemn black, stood with his eyes bent downwards, and with such a dejected behavior of the visage, as showed us Hamlet as SHAKESPEARE drew him with his magic pen. At the fall of the curtain at the close of each act, the applause was most enthusiastic, and five times was this greatest of actors, living or dead, called out to receive the homage due his transcendent genius.

The Fenians here have been worked up to the highest pitch of excitement by the news received from across the water, or rather by the cable under the water, that the Irish drama has begun in good earnest. Sober Irishmen (and drunken ones too) wink their eyes in a mysterious and knowing manner, as who should say we know a thing or two or a thing or three that we do not choose to tell; nevertheless, from the nature of the winking, we can guess that the secret is, that New York City intends to furnish a host of Fenian birds for the Irish stew which is to be administered in hot haste to John Bull. British spies ar. said to be here endeavoring to get their fingers into the stew, to learn how it tastes or how hot it is, but the Fenians keep winking with one eye at a time, the other being fixed upon the inquiring spies.

The RUSSELL-WIGGIN breach of promise case was decided yesterday in the Supreme Court. WILLIAM RUSSELL loved CORNELIA WIGGIN, and she loved him in return. They became engaged, and WILLIAM promised to marry CORNELIA. After being very happy for some time, RUSSELL became exceedingly unhappy, for a friend had informed him that Miss CORNELIA was not as pure as CAESAR'S wife, and in fact had been prosecutor in a certain law suit in which CAESAR'S wife could not have been engaged; in short, she had recovered six hundred dollars' damages from a gentleman who had wronged her. The green-eyed monster called on RUSSELL and advised him to break off the engagement. He took the monster's advice, and CORNELIA sued for breach of promise, laying the damages done to her heart at ten thousand dollars. The love letters produced in Court show that WILLIAM loved strongly, and that he liked CORNELIA to call him "DOLLY," as a more poetic pet name than WILLIAM. They also gave evidence of the fact that he was au fait in love correspondence. He mentions in one letter that he loves his dear, dear CORNELIA very much, and wished to see "those dear eyes looking so tremulously and pleadingly into mine" (not my eyes—DOLLY'S). Dear, dear CORNELIA did not get enough money to repair the injury done to her tender heart. The Court was under the impression that the premises could be repaired for less, and so awarded her but two hundred dollars.

To-day being Thanksgiving day, is generally observed throughout the city. One-fourth of the people attend Church, one-fourth the matinee performances at various places of amusement, one-fourth stroll about the streets, looking around generally, and the balance remain at home to look after their Thanksgiving turkey dinners. The poor people, such of them as are taken care of by the charitable societies, will enjoy the day, for were it not for Thanksgiving day and Christmas, they would not be able to testify in a court-house that a turkey is a bird that may be eaten without injury to the digestive organ.

MARZETTI'S Italian Opera Troupe gave "Fra Diavolo" last night, at the Winter Garden, in splendid style. The "North Star" will be given to-morrow and on Saturday. BOOTH will appear as "Richard."

The weather is quite as warm as it was in Charleston when I left there last week.
