ELIGIBLE MEN.

The Richmond Dispatch says on this subject: Should the worst happen for this State, and a portion of our citizens who have served in public portion of our citizens who have served in public offices be rondered ineligible, it becomes a matter of interest to consider who are eligible and how the important offices are likely to be filled. Having looked about somewhat, we feel quite cheered to find on pure canable, agreene still laft to take looked about somewhat, we feel quite cheered to find so many capable persons still left to take charge of public affairs." We think, ourselves, that when the proper time arrives for aelection, if we only manage rightly, there will be no want of representative men for the State. We may be troubled about Congress, if we ever get the privi-lege of representation there. We think with the a number of young men, who have both energy and dope to take the places of some who have little of either hope or energy. The men we need now are men of spirit and confidence in their ability to

OUR SITUATION-A GLANCE AT HISTO RICAL PARALLELS.

The Richmond Whig publishes an editorial with the above caption, which is so excellent in temper and sentiment, and so well suited to the present nence we think it deserves :

"While we cannot, if we would, close our eyes" not surronder curselves to despair. We should, like sensible men, inquire what we can do to better our condition, and do it candidly, manfally, and openly. We all know that we cannot fight, and it is needless, therefore, to talk about fighting. We an grumble and scold, but who wants manly Vir upon our line of action. We excil ourselves of this pause to address son ome useful lessons. Those who have necessive generations under a peculiar form of overnment controlled by themselves, regard the dee of revolution with dismay and horror. They magine that life will be unendurable under any other government. We are just in the situation. We have but now emerged from a war in which we were discomfitted, and while the Constitution still on, and with the start of a complete revolu-nations survived them, and the people became prosperous and happy. We have this advantage, that we have already passed through the most fearful stage—that of violence and bloodahed. In this instance, the revolution is culminating, peacefully, if painfully, after the war. If we survived the war, why can we not survive the change of government? ations survived them, and the governed men. In those days it was esteemed honorable in the patriot who failed to throw him new governments formed. Violence, bloodshed, confiscation and barishment were the accompani-ments of every such revolution. Yet in a few years France became quiet, and the people prosper and contented. But little more than a half cont and contented. But little more than a half century has elapsed since the revolution which ended in the elevation of the Corsican prodigy to inperial power was followed by his overthrow at Waterloo, by the occupation of his capital by the allies, and by the utter erhaustion and impovementations and the French people; but notwithstanding the occurrence of two revolutions since that period, they are reckoned among the happiest and most prosperous people on earth.

are rectoried among the happiest and most propperous people on earth.

Look at England, if you wou'd Learn what a nation can plass through and live. The Norman conquest, which occurred about eight hundred yearsago, threatened universal extinction. A more complete subjugation was never known. Demoss day book affants the most complete evidence of the extent to which the Normans possessed themselves of the landed property of the country.
This book embodies the results of a meral survey of the kingdom, and to show the impatient land-greed of the conqueror and his followers this survey, which was ordered by William while keeping Christmas with his Court, at Gloinestie, was completed by Easter of the following year. So minute was it that the chronicler tells us "there was not one single hide of hand no, not even a yard of land, which was not set down." He adds: Not even an ox or a cow, or a swine that was on the of land, which was not set down." He adds: "Not even an ox or a cow, or a swine, that was on, the land was left out of the record." Yet the native population survived this unexampled subjugation, prospered, and became in time incorporated within conquerors. They made the heat of their deplorable situation, and turned everything they could to their advantage instead of surrendering themselves to despair. That was a revolution wrought by foreign domination.

England has since undergone internal revolutions, accompanied by bloody, cruel and long-continued wars. The revolution that culminated in the execution of the first Charles and the elevation of Chonwell to kingly power under the modest title of Lord Protector, was one that established an despirate forms the subjusted of the nation, rendering their lives inscence and placing their liber.

dering their lives inscente and placing their liber-ty and property in peril. Choxyetta died, and the commonwealth came to an end. The restora-tion of the Bruants involved another revolution, by which the generales. which the enemies of Charles the Second and shouse were puished and humbled.

In all these recent on the full measure of di-saster, degradation, confiscation and purialment was meted out to the weater party. They, no doubt, felt as we feel, humiliated and despondent. But when they found that resistance was unavail-ing, and opposition only exesperated the provailing party and increased their own burdens, they learned to reconcile they make the them. to recongle themselves to their situation. They con-ceded what, they had no longer the power to deny, and conformed to the authority they could not suc-cessfully strive against. Their wives and obtaincould not, without criminality be sorificed to punctilios, and this criminality they were not willing to inour. The bulk in all these instances are vived the changes of government, and their posterily are; at this day, as much and as prosperous a portion of these experal mations as if no such revolutions had occurred. Let us profit by these lessons from history and
