A meteor, of extraordinary size, passed recontly over the neighborhood of Bordeaux. In its transit it dropped sparks, three of which were found in holes burnt in umbrellas carried by those who were out of doors at the time.

The Aberdeen (Miss.) Examiner says that there are more freedmen at work on the farms of Monroe county than at any period since the war, and there are more scres "under the plow" than have been cultivated in the last three years.

Four hundred and twenty-three deaths occurred in the New York city and public institutions during the past week, thirteen of which were from accidents or negligence, twenty-six from scarlatina, and fifteen from typhus and typhoid fevers.

The New York Herald's Mexican correspondence, dated at Fresnillo, in the State of Zacatecas, gives a short but comprehensive history of the military experiences of ORTEGA, the pretended President, who is now a prisoner in the hands of JUAREZ. The apparatus cost $10,500. A duty of $4000 was levied on it, but a bill has been introduced in Congress to refund the amount. It will plough an acre an hour to the depth of twelve inches.

The Austin (Texas) Intelligencer has the following: On the 19th of last month, a considerable party of Indians visited the settlements in San Saba county, and carried off a large drove of horses belonging to the settlers. A small party of whites attacked the Indians, but we learn they were worsted. The redskins were too numerous, and were armed with six shooters and Sharp's rifles.

Among the curiosities promised for the approaching exhibition are floating Islands on the Seine at Billancourt, as may be seen on the great lakes in China. The Montgomery Mail, of the 6th, publishes a new schedule for the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, and says: "We invite the attention of the reader to the new schedule of the Montgomery and West Point Railroad, to take effect on and after Sunday next. By this change a double daily line is established east—the trains leaving this city at 6 A. M. and 5 P. M., and arriving at 8 P. M. and 8 A. M.—thus forming a close connection with all

The exercise of the elective franchise was practically illustrated in the election of officers for the Mercantile Library, Philadelphia, on Tuesday. A poll was opened for the female stockholders, who, to the number of one hundred and fifty-six, cast their votes. Both sexes voted together, and the proceedings were conducted with the utmost propriety, no confusion or disorder, as too often is the case where men vote alone. The ladies walked up with as much sang froid as if they were accustomed to the privilege. As illustrating how the thing might be done, this voting at the library election should be noted

The Norfolk Virginian says: "The Hon, Mr. BENJAMIN, was, not, the most popular man in the Confederacy at the date of the great disaster. In fact, he ranked high among the 'best abused' men in the Confederacy; but the moment he became an exile the asperity of criticism became disarmed. CHARLESTON.

SATURDAY MORNING, MARCH 9, 1867. IMPEACHMENT.

The Northern people must have excitement. The slavery question is dead; the "Rebel States" are properly gagged and brigadiered; the negroes have suffrage, temperance is unpopular. The number of sensation topics is thus becoming more and more restricted; and by the ordinary law of compensation the interest centres and intensifies on those that are left. These we believe just now are the Woman Suffrage and the Impeachment Questions. One or the other of these now forms the theme of almost every lecturer in New York, Brooklyn, Boston, and all the smaller towns and villages of the Northern country. On Saturday evening last, on his way to Washington and Congress, General B. F. BUTLER delighted the people of Albany, New York, with an exposition of his views on the Impeachment question. This was very kind of Mr. BUTLER, seeing that he had already done so on a previous occasion at Brooklyn; and, in fact, had been venting his opinions freely on this subject ever since last fall; yet he modestly in his exordium says, that he comes before the audience on a somewhat unusual topic. He moreover asked his hearers to examine with him "without heat, calmly, coolly, and in the full exercise of judgment, why it was that our fathers put the great power of impeachment and removal into the Constitution." This he wishes them to do "to convince the reason and instinct (?), and not to inflame the passions." He then said: "Harsh vitaperation, hard names, slander, scandal, and personal abuse, never yet harmed any man; for, if it had, he who speaks to you would have been dead long, long ago." He then examines the grounds. wherefore the President should, in his opinion, be impeached. 1. Usurpation of executive power, in that he established governments in the Southern States, without having any right to do so. "Two-thirds of both Houses of Congress have said that the acts wore illegal, and that no legal governments exist there. Somebody ought to be impeached-either both Houses, or the President. Which shall it be ?" And again he said : "Whether he believes he is right or believes he is wrong is not the question. The question is: "Is ho in the way?" [Laughter and applause.] If he is, he must be got out of it." This is the whole statement of the question. He is in the way, and it is nothing but most palpable hypocrisy that can induce BUTLER or any of his confreres to revert to the Constitution in plea of their iniquitous agitations. Can any sane man for a moment believe that the clause in the Constitution, providing for impeachment, ever contemplated an error of judgment, (supposing, for the sake of argument, that the President is in error), as a "high crime and misdemeanor?"

He next arraigns the President for his exercise of the pardoning power; and while he disclaims A steam plough, with engines and tackle his intention of bringing up "Old Bailey matters, he, nevertheless, meanly and slanderously hints, that the President made the granting of parious a matter of sale and profit, one of the formest slanders and basest falsehoods ever uttered. It puzzles us to think how even the ingenious RUTER will be able to show that the President's pardons for political offences are unconstitutional, though these pardons were double and triple the number of what BUTLER alleges them to have been. He wasted but little argument on this charge. The following con-

> "Does any one here think that it is constitu tional for the President to carry the pardoning power so far as to be obliged to have a pardon-mill to grind out pardons by the thousand? Does any-He then comes to the last count in this indict-

"Again, I will not go into the question of ap-pointments to office, for I hold that there is some-thing higher, more noble, and more grand in political action than the question of who should peachment, I would put those main great acts of his as the principal dish, and perhaps I might pep-per it and salt it with a little of his personal ac-tions, and the question of how he disposed of the offices; but that would be but the condiments to the great dish which I should propose to put before the American people." This is all, absolutely all, that can be brought against the President, by BUTLER even, his bitterest enemy, the most violent partisan, the most unscrupulous politician to be found in all the country. And is it upon such flimsy allegations and special pleading that the country is to be plunged into a revolution, that the industry of the land is to be paralyzed, commerce and business of all kinds ruined? Little as we have the right to expect sensible action on any political question from the North, we cannot help thinking that the more sober portion of the people will discountenance such unprincipled and suicidal party tactics.

But what says BUTLER on these matters? He propounds these questions: "Is it expedient? is it best? hadn't we better get along with him? is it worth while? to which we, of course, know his answers. "But it is objected," he continues, "that the business of the country will suffer. How is the business now? [Laughter.] Paralyzed because we don't know how the thing is to be settled. Is it best to wait two years longer and allow this continued chronic state of unsettlement to go on? "Let me call your attention further to another trouble. 'Why,' I am told, 'don't do this, if you do you will injure our bonds abroad-you will shake your credit abroad.' What has our credit to do abroad? We carried on this war, and the bankers of Europe would not lend us a dollar until we got through substantially, and showed that we were the strongest and ablest nati . on the globe And then, when we got through the war, they consented to take our bonds at 40, 50 and 60 cents on the dollar, and I believe now they have got up to 71 or 74 cents, or somewhere thereabout. Well, they say that our bonds will go down in Europe, and the people in Europe won't take them. I may be mistaken, my friends, but it seems to me that most be willing to be impeached myself." But we will not follow the eccentric BENJAMIN any farther. We earnestly hope, however, that wiser counsels will prevail, and that BUTLER, and such as he, may not be permitted to destroy what little order there is left in the land.
