LITERARY ITEMS.

The following coup a'aed of the latest French litarature, we abridge from the London Saturday

Review : The fourth and last volume of M. Poirson's Histoire du Begne de Henri IV, begins with the year 1600, and discusses the King's foreign policy at the time when he was already mediating what is generally known as his grand dessein. With reference' the murder of Henry IV, our author believes ' Ravaillac did not act under the in-fluence ot any person or political party. He was certainly not the agent of Spain. It is equally abeurd to make the Queen Mary Pulledici and the Duke d'Eperson responsible for so foul a crime of the progress of literature, science in sector. and the fine

Mr. Gould, niterly disregardful of the propri-ties of historic tradition, declares that the story of Tell has been repeated with variations years inco-tive aleventh contury. The original Tell was a Norse here, he was a myth of the Farce Islands, he was an English, a Finnish, and a Persian per-tory. Awai, locland, Switzerland and Demmark put in the estorges claims; and on these different variants of the same story, in contribute so remote, as well as antecodent in date, Mr. Gould rests his sheery thas William Tell is not an historical char-sets.
