An Solla, proprietor of the celebrated Ville del Galcolto, near Lecco, on the Lake of Como, and possessor of an immense fortune, has just blown out his brains. The cause is attributed to grief at having lost a small sum of money. When, after his death, the authorities came to make an ex-amination of his house they found there upwards of 200,000 francs in gold. The Princess of Wales is said to be threatene

"Mr. Tilman Gregory, a very wealthy planter, residing near Augusta, Arkansas, fell into an altercation over a game of cards with a Dr. Dameron, in the course of which the latter drew a pistol and shot the former in the hip. Mr. Grecory being in liquor taunted him for not shooting better than that. Mr. Dameron, who was also intoxicated, fired again, shooting him this time in the breast. Mr. Grecory placed his hand upon his pistol, and taking deliberate aim at the Doctor, shot him through the heart. Grecory, that taking the through the heart. Will have to remove the doctarion. He further says he will commence the work of re-gistration as soon as he receives a certified copy of the law; that he (SHERIDAN) feels himself equal to the law; that he (SHERIDAN) feels himself equal to the task imposed upon him by the law, and will perform his work with credit to the military. Gen. SHERIDAN concludes by saying: "I shall make but few removals." Gen. Grant replies that it would not be proper to remove Governors; that the sub-ject is now under consideration, and it is not be-lieved that military commanders have the power, and that removals can only be made by act of Con-gress, or by trial under the sixth section of the

The relations between Austria and Prussia appear to be quite friendly. Some of the leading papers of Austria advocate the conclusion of a defensive and offensive allance between the two countries, and a Ministerial paper of Berlin significantly replies that Austria would not find a more faithful ally than Prussia, if she would enter, without reservation into a close which any than Prussia, if she would enter, without reservation, into a close union, and promote the national development of Germany. Some years ago, Prussia proposed to Austria the conclusion of an offensive and defensive alliance, with a mutual guarantee of territories; if Austria would consent guarantee or territories; it Austria would consent to withdraw from the German Confederation and cede to Prussia the leadership of New Germany. The above language of the Ministerial paper of Berlin, and the present relations of Prussia with the South German States, would seem to indicate the South German States, would seem to indicate that a renewal of similar propositions from Prussis to Austria is by no means impossible. A few days ago the artillerists of both the Citadel and the man-of-war Aurora, at Quebec, were on and the mandows Aroya, at Quebec, were engaged in target practice on the ice. The men of the big Armstrongs in the Citadel fired at a mark nearly two miles dietant, making good shots which would have soon disposed of an ordinary yessel. A number of fool-hardy youths dotted the is fig. dose proximity to the targets, to pick up the capent missiles. Coolly watching each shot, they were often within only a few yards of its track, and no somer had it struck the target, on the ice, than the lade pounced on it like vultures, and claimed I the Southern States.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, APRIL 10, 1867.

THE INJUNCTION BEFORE THE SU-PREME COURT.

We are informed by the telegram that Georgia has joined Mississippi in the motion for the injunction, and has retained Judge BLACK and Mr. O'CONNOB, both very able law-yers, very pure men, and very distinguished We regret this. We can understand that these gentlemen are earnest and conscientious advocates of the legal theory of Judge SHARKEY, who was among the steadiest and most unflinching opponents of secession, and ROBERT J. WALKER, who, at a public din-ner in London, where he was Special Commissioner from the United States, de clared "that all the blood shed by the North in this war, is as holy as the blood shed on Calvary"—can consistently support the princiles upon which the injunction rests. But how can we? The petition for leave to file the motion ow before us, and we cannot be mistaken as to the ground upon which it has been put. Its leading postulate is explicitly stated:

"The said State further shows, &c., that it vas impossible for her people or for the State in its corporative capacity, to dissolve that conection with the other States, and any attempt to do so by secession or otherwise, was a nullimended constitution, a solemn declaration that the pretended ordinance of secession adopted by a portion of her people was absolutely null and void, and she now most solemn y asserts that her connection with the Federal lovernment was not in any wise thereby impaired and destroyed. And she moreover avera and charges that the Congress of the United States cannot constitutionally expel her from the Union, and any attempt which practically loes so is a nullity." Now, whatever Georgia and Mississippi ma ave done, South Carolina did not declare her Ordinance of Secession null and void. She did wiser and truer thing. She repealed it, and hus declared that while it was the justification of such of her citizens as had obeyed her laws as a sovereign State, and while she claimed it as a right to make such an Ordinance under the Constitution, yet she had submitted that question of right to the arbitrament of war, it had been decided against it, and that for the uture it was here duty to consider it as eliminated from the Constitution, as much repealed by war as it would have been in peace by an endment to the Constitution,

These two theories are utterly inconsistent and the one which we have placed on the record of our Convention will- not sustain the argu-ment of the petition. This is so clear that if his were the only ground of the injunction we would scarcely deem it necessary to argue. But there are two other propositions connected with it that have confused many honest minded people which we think it important to notice. The first is that because Congress passed a esolution in 1861 that the war was not then waged "for any purpose of conquest or for interfering with the rights or the established institutions of these States," but "to preserve the Union, with all the dignity and rights of the several States unimpaired," therefore, when we surrendered in 1865 we surrendered under the protection of this resolution, which had not been altered by the events and changes of ever seen. Now, there is not an example in history in which two parties at war have kept open a standing set of terms upon which the war is to be ended. Every negotiation, every war changes its terms of settlement as the fortunes of war vary, and it was just so with thi will, he thereupon brought suit. Witnesses testified that his claim was just, and that these promises had been made. The consequence was he recovered 315 000 of the cortes." ent as to the rights claimed by the South. As the war progressed the North found that slavery was an element of strength on the part of the South, very difficult to overcom and in repeal of its resolution it emancipated the slave. Then, as the fortune of war turned against us, came the negotiations at Fortres Monroe, where the terms offered and rejected were infinitely better than the present. And when we surrendered our armies and closed the contest the final terms were dictated by GRANT and SHERMAN, and every sensible man knows that these terms are the only conditions of surrender to which we have the right to ap peal. What is the use of trying to delude our selves into the belief that the course of a grea war "shattering that it may reach and shat tering what it reaches" can be governed and limited by the law of special contract?

In the next place, it is contended that the President's action and the assent of the Southern people, through their conventions, was legitimate and final settlement of our position as restored States. Now, of the President's bold and persevering defence of what he considers the true interpretation of the Constitu tion, we have nothing but admiration to ex press. Whatever may have been the fate of his vetoes, their language and their spirit were as manly and as patriotic as the famous declaration of CICEREO, when he assumed the Consulate: "Conscript Fathers, I will so adminis ter my great office that if the Tribunes of the people attack me, I can despise them; if they attack the Constitution, I can chastise them.

But what has been the result? When the armies of LEE and Johnson sur rendered, Congress was not in session. The President, with his sound practical sense, saw that a restoration and maintenance of some cival government in the Southern States was absolutely necessary, let it be as temporary as it might. We felt painfully the same thing, for without, the country would have fallen into anarchy and lawlessness. He, therefore, constructed such provisional State governments as he thought best, and we sensibly and cheerfully accepted these governments for our protection. The President has never claimed that hcould restore the States—his position, as we understand it is, that the Constitution restored them, and that all he did was to furnish the neans through which the vigor of the Constitution could act. And whatever his theory, the President has never denied what is too practical a truth for denial, that for his policy to he successful, he needed the co-operation o Congress. As soon as Congress met they re fused that co-operation, and from that day there has been a fierce contest between Con-gress and the President as to whether they should support his policy or he conform to theirs, the joint action of both being necessary to carry either policy into effect. With the history of that contest we have at present nothing to do. What we now maintain is, that, until by some agreement, forced or willing, between Congress and the President, there was and there could be no decision as to the position of

The difference between the policy of the President and the policy of Congress is not a difference of principle or of object, but simply of means. Under the President's policy, he of each week, agreeably to the following as commander-in-chief of the United States, appointed Mr. PERET Provisional Governor of South Carolina, and put Mr. MAGRATH, the legitimate Governor of the State, into For Pulaski. Under the Congressional policy, he as commander-in-chief of the United States, places General Sickles as military commande of South Carolina, and instructs Colonel Onn. the legitimate Governor of the State, to consuland co-operate with him. Under the Presi lent's policy he called a Convention of the peo-Deutsche Schutzen-Gesellsohaft.

Between the means of the President's policy and the means of the Congressional policy here is, God knows, a wide difference. The provisions of the Reconstruction Act are harsh nd hard to bear. The conditions which the President would have required were generous and prudent. And no one who thinks will for moment suppose that in this argument we are contending for the wisdom of universal suffrage the justice of disfranchisement, the supremacy of military rule. But what we do contend this, plainly and earnestly, that as far as we of the South are concerned this Act of Reconstruction is not an ordinary law, passed by a common government and the subject of legal interpretation before ordinary Courts, but that it is an Act of Settlement, decided on by a party who have conducted a great civil war to a suc cessful issue, who hold the almost omnipoten power of the government, and who, constitu tional or not, have laid down its provisions as the only conditions of restoration; and that i s little less than madness again to provoke at issue with Congress and to run the risk of that political excitement which any attempt to reate a forced reaction has always produced n the history of great revolutions.
