... The Nicolson pavement seems to be very popu ar wherever laid down. The citizens of Philadelphia are highly pleased with that now finished on Broad street, and insist that other thoroughfares shall be similarly paved. The Nicolson pavement in New York has also stood the test. As to the relative merits of the Nicolson and Belgian pavements, a new York contemporary says that a square of each was laid in that city at the same time, in 1865, and that while the Nicolson remains smoother the Belgian is full of irregularities, and is in such poor condition that it will soon need relaying. The universal testimony is, in fact, that where the Nicolson pavement is thoroughly laid wine crop this year will be the largest it has ever down according to the rules of the inventor, it has not its equal for comfort and durability.

Coming Due.

The debt of the United States will have to be provided for; and it is monstrous to suppose that even such a Government as this can afford to pay seven, eight, or nine per cent. upon the money it has borrowed. Surely it is the part of wisdom to keep the debt from growing; and, to see that, if the total amount cannot be diminished, it, at all events, shall not be increased. But there is no economy, or sagacity, in the way in which the finances of this country are managed; and the debt that was created by war is being strengthened and inflated by

The expenses of registration, under the military acts, are estimated at one million of dollars for the State of Arkansas alone. If the other Southern States require money in the same proportion, the total cost of registration will be fifteen millions, or more. And the elections, which heretofore have not cost the Federal Government a single dollar, will now add about five millions to the list; so that the expenses of registration and elections will be over twenty millions. Then there are the troops which Congress has made it necessary to retain in the South. They must be fed, and clothed, and paid; and they cost about forty five millions. Besides these, there is the Freedmen's Bureau, which costs in itself a million a year, and brings the grand total of expenditure, for reconstruction, to the startling amount of one hundred and thirty millions.

This is the cost of one year's legislation; i is the premium paid by the whole people to enable a gang of reckless schemers to carry out their revolutionary and suicidal plans. of several unfortunate soldiers who had got into There is no present chance of the expenditures being diminished. Our Paper.

We return our sincere thanks for the kindly and generous greetings which the DAILY NEWS since the recent change of proprietorship and contemporaries of the press. Such kind words encourage us to renewed endeavors to make our journal in every respect a live and readable newspaper. We subjoin a few of these friendly notices:

[From the Columbia Chronicle.] THE CHARLESTON DAILY NEWS .- The change of fected in the proprietary and managing interest of this journal, in the accession of Messrs. Riordan, Dawson & Evans, would seem to indicate, from Dawson & Evans, would seem to indicate, from the announcement of the new proprietors, that it will henceforth deal with public questions honest-ly, fearlessly and consistently, untrammelled by the ligaments of cliques, and unrestrained by the timidity of time-servers. We like this intimation. It evinces a healthy conception of a live and vigor-ous press, and we bespeak for the News an exten-sion of the sphere of its influence and material presspecify.

[From the Columbia Phoenix.] The last number of The News contains a notice of a complete change in its proprietorship, as well as editorial management. Messrs. McMillan & Morton, the former proprietors, have disposed of the entire business to Messrs. Riordan, Dawson & Co.; and Dr. H. Baer, of the editorial staff, has also retired. Mr. Riordan, although young in years, is old in newspaper experience—having formerly been connected editorially with the Mercury and latterly with the Courier. Mr. Dawson, we believe, was connected with the newspaper world in England, but for nearly a year has held the position of managing editor of the Charleston Mercury—during which time the racy productions of his pen have attracted considerable attention and admiration. Long life and prosperity to the "out-goers" and success to the "in-comers," say The last number of THE NEWS contains a notice

[From the Marion (S. C.) Star.] THE CHARLESTON DAILY NEWS passed into new hands on Monday last. Messrs. B. R. Riordan, F. W. Dawson, and Henry Evans, are the new proprietors. Mr. Riordan has been for some time connected with the editorial department of the Charleston Courier, and Mr. Dawson in the same capacity, with the Charleston Mercury, and are

His visit to Washington put matters into such a shape that the Government will probably make the sale. The price to be paid is $288,000. During is stay he visited General Lee's old home at rlington Heights, now devoted to the freedmen villages, and a last resting place for departed soldiers.

The two mercantile failures, says the New York correspondent of the Philadelphia Ledger, alluded to in my latter of yesterday, were those of Robert L. Taylor, shipping merchant, and H. W. Hubbell, shipping and commercial merchant. Both parties have made assignments. The liabilities of the former, it is said, will reach a million of dollars, former, it is said, will reach a minion of dollars, including endorsements for Mr. Hubbell. These failures are the direct result of the protracted stringency in money, and it will be fortunate if some of the smaller houses are not compelled to succumb.

The last number of 'The Round Table' con tains a highly enlogistic review of 'Kathrina a Poem,' by Dr. J. G. HOLLAND, which opens a very interesting question as to what the reviewer's ideas of the essentials of Poetry may be. Unfortunately we have not a copy of the production at hand, but the critic makes two or three extracts for us-it is to be presumed by way of justifying his panegyric-and by them we are quite willing to judge of the merits of the 'Poem' without further curious enquiry. Premising that he is about to indulge in what Mr. Swinburne considers the only solace of the critical profession, 'the noble pleasure of praising," the reviewer thus pro-

"For Kathrina then we have approbation only. We have read it through pretty carefully once, and deem it worthy, poetically and morally, of all the admiration which it will be likely to get. Metrically considered, it is almost perfect; to have written but one halting line (which the author will discover on page 225) in a poem of between five or six thousand is quite a triumph in itself; and for even that one we dare say the printer is responsible. Dr. Holland's practice as a writer is guaranty for his knowledge of the difference between tetrameter and pentameter iambic. So we may say that, metrically considered, it is quite perfect. In point of imagination and fancy it may seem deficient to those whose taste has been deterioriated by the extravagance of Tennyson and Swinburne; but this lack is more than atoned by a severe simplicity of treatment as far as possibly removed. "For Kathrina then we have approbation only. but this lack is more than atoned by a severe sim-plicity of treatment as far as possibly removed from the brilliant indecencies of a school that Dr. Holiand so soundly lashes in the vigorous lines on page 145. We forbear to quote them, as nearly everybody by this time must have the book, and anybody who hasn't should get it at once. We consider it a duty for every one to get it who de-sires to encourage a national literature founded on a solid basis of elevated purity and profundity of

After a few apologetic remarks on what this eulogistic critic is evidently uncomfortably aware to be a rather questionable feature in the book, viz: "Paul's swearing," which he describes by telling us that he "blasphemes frightfully through the first two books," the reviewer proceeds to support his panegyric of the Poem by various quotations. Our space forbids us to reproduce these in full, but we give a few specimens:

"I watched her while she read, but failed to find The sympathy of pleasure in her face I had expected. Finishing at last, She raised her gree, and fixing them on me, Said thoughtfully: 'You like this I suspect.'" We can anticipate the answer: ". Well, rather !" I responded." This is pretty good, but our reviewer's las quotation even excels it: "It had no moral, bore no ministry

Of pious teaching, and made an appeal
To suffrance or suffrage of the muffs
Who in the pulpit or the press prepare
The nation's pap"!!!

Now we would ask the Round Table reviewer: Are words of this sort, put in lines of equal length, and written by a Northern author, are they "poetry" according to his notions? If they are, then the world has been surely very much in error on the subject. Perhaps it would be more charitable to the reputation for critical merit which the Round Table, whether justly or unjustly, has acquired, to take the opening sentence of this critique as the key to ts meaning. We are told there that "Dr. HOLLAND is a gentleman whose personal character we respect and esteem very highly." In the present state of criticism on this side the Atlantic this fact may be sufficient to explain not only the tone of the review, but its existence at all. What is to be thought indeed of critic who talks to us about "the brilliant indecencies of a school" in which he includes and collates Tennyson and Swinburne? We fear that the day is still far distant when some fearless scholar and thinker shall do for the art of criticism in this country what M. SAINTE Beuve has done for it in France, and MATTHEW Arnold scarcely less brilliantly in England. We are glad, however, to be able to agree with him in one point. He closes his notice with his fullest fame as a poet will rest, and we do not imagine that posterity will feel at all inclined to disturb it"-nor, we might add, his
