The principle of co-operation may be applied to every department of manufacturing inand as profitably as to an ordinary retail store. In New York there is a co-operative print-ing house, which began with six working members, and now employs twenty-five. In Troy.

New York, there is a stove foundry, on the same system, and in Rochester there is the Equitable Co-operative Foundry, which has turned out seventy-nine tons of stove casting in one month. There are, also, in New York City several co-operative building associations which are rapidly becoming wealthy.

There are cooperative societies for the sale of dry goods. boots, shoes; eleven flour mills; a wire faotory, a shuttle factory, and a cotton factory. In addition to these, there are hundreds of societies for aiding the members when sick, known as Friendly and Benefit Societies. The entire friendly societies of Great Britain possess a reserve fund of $140,000,000; and their

A Book-buying People.

The Round Table, in a recent article, notices a fact which most of us have remarked, though we may have differed as to the cause. We mean the peculiar and almost universal tendency among people in this country to buy books which they know they connot understand. The Round Table seems t a loss whether to attribute this queer national characterisof democratic principles. Works like those of JOHN STUART MILL, HERBERT SPENCER, CAR-LYLE, BUCKLE, and even COMTE, are constantly found in families, whose Foglish counterparts in means, pursuits and intelligence, would
