TUESDAY MORNING, DECEMBER 24, 1867. To the Readers of the Daily News-Or

New Terms-The Cash System. The announcement that on and after the first of January the subscription price of THE DAILY News will be reduced to Six Dollars a year has een received with many substantial marks of appreciation by the public, both in the city and State. But in order to publish a first-class paper at that low price, we shall be compelled, in future, to adhere rigorously to the cash system, and require, invariably, the payment of subscriptions in advance. It should be generother day, which weighed three hundred and ally understood that everything required for the publication of a newspaper-composition, paper, press-work, labor, and expenses of every description-must unavoidably be paid for in cash at the end of every week. If the credit system is tolerated, and subscribers neglect to pay promptly, the losses thus incurred by publishers in a little while become intolerably onerous and oppressive. There are hundreds, however, in our city who, though anxious to take a live newspaper, and willing to pay for it, can ill afford, at this time, even the small outlay of six dollars. To accommodate this class of readers, we have made arrangements by which, on and after New Year's Day, The Daily News will be delivered, every morning, before seven o'clock, in all parts of the city, by attentive and experienced newsmen, at Eighteen Cents A WEEK, payable weekly.

The advantages of this plan are evident at a glance. Those who take their papers upon the weekly system only pay out their money, week by week, as their papers are received; they time by giving one week's notice; when they leave the city for a few weeks they can suspend -Miss Pugin, daughter of the well-known their papers, and be at no expense. The yearly cost at the weekly rate is more than when the subscription at our advertised rates is paid in advance at our office; but there is every reason to believe that the new plan will, by its simplicity, security, and the smallness of the cash expense, enable many persons to take a daily paper who could not become subscribers for as of the Freedmen's Bureau in Maryland, Kentucky, long a period as six, or even three months. It is our desire to accommodate all classes of readers, and those who are not able to pay their subscriptions in advance can take advantage of the weekly arrangement, which will go

The Roman Question in the French Cham

The French Chamber of Deputies is the great arena where the champions periodically strip for words combat. The French have made no mean name "in the world's broad field of battle," but their most distinguished "heroes in the strife" must be looked for on the floor of the Corps Legislatif. The debates in the two Houses of the English Parliament, or in the American Congress of late years, rarely attract much attention, it may be because there are no giants in these days. But we opine the rious motion affecting her military administration, reason for the exceptionally brilliant displays the defects of the machine have been made but of eloquence in Paris is to be sought as much in the fact of the restriction of public debate as in the genius and talent of the French statesmen. The censorship lends zest to the discussion. M. le President Schneider conpossesses greater advantages than Utah for the trols the Chamber, and Napoleon controls cu tivation of the grape, the mulberry tree, and SCHNEIDER. Members are kept strictly to the point under discussion, and that point must never be the government of His Majesty the Emperor of the French. "Interpellations" are permitted; a member may ask for information on this or that point of public policy; and vated land. In Bombay it is less, the area in these skilful masters of wordy fence watch their opportunity to give a home thrust, whenever there is the least opening in the cuirass, or ministerial gaucherie in parrying the spirited assaults of the opposition. In considering this subject it is proper also to say that in France alone is rhetoric and eloquence-oratory-made a special study, as was the case by the old Greeks and Romans. Hence they have the best speakers and most polished writers of modern times. The graces of style and flowers of rhetoric, and the blade of satire, sharp and polished, are all laid under requisition by the French debater, and are not deemed incompatible with the most profound highest statesmanship. On the second of December M. Jules Favrs opened the debate on the Roman question, for the opposition. He was replied to by Messrs. Moustier and Rouner for the government, and by M. THIERS for the old regime, all three in favor of the Pope. Jules Favre spoke for the opposition, we said, which, in this instance, happens to represent the liberal party, both of France and of Europe. M. Jules FAVRE, however, did not speak on this side because it is liberal, but simply because the government was on the other side. In the contest last Spring with Germany, FAVRE, GLAIS BIZOIN, PICARD, and the rest of the "left" in the Chamber, and M. EMILE DE GIRARDIN in the Liberte, were indefatigable in their efforts to and therefore in the interests of liberalism. These gentlemen appear to take their cue on questions of public policy solely from the side sition, and all these several questions are by them viewed as so many engines to be used to hurl missiles at the Emperor. Jules Favre assails the Emperor's policy of intervention, and demands the evacuation of Rome. M. Thiers assails the government from the other extreme, and can only see salvation for France and peace for Europe in going back twenty-five years, to the period when Louis Philippe was King and M. Thiers his prime minister. He scouts the Napoleonic principle of accopting accomplished facts.
