THE MURDERER'S ORDEAL .- One of the oldest and most universal superstitions is the belief that the body of a murdered man will bleed, if touched by the murderer. It is rare, however, in these days of trial by jury, to meet with a case of a bona fide mediaval ordeal. Such was testified to yesterday in the Court of Sessions, before Judge Moses, in the case of Preston Johnston. Our reagers will find the particulars in regard to it under the proper head in this morning's News. The testimony about the ordeal was altogether from colored people, and when we consider their prejudices and their superstitions, and their proneness to believe the supernatural, we must confess to considerable doubt in regard to the genuineness of the phenomenon; and the jury do not appear to have been influenced by this part of the testimony.

COURT INCIDENTS .- Some difficulty in forming a jury was experienced yesterday by the counsel for Thomas Dolan. One of the jurors objected to serve, as he did not think the panel drawn by the court was a legal jury. The Judge had previously explained the law to this Judge had previously explained, the law to this of the state of the st Court of Appeals the juries were legal bodies. As the juror, however, remained firm in his convictions, the Judge remarked he would waive the right of court, and discharged the juror for conscience sake.

Another juror was objected to because he rating this assertion the objection was sus

When the panel was exhausted only nine jurors were drawn, and the Judge ordered the names of thirty additional jurors to be drawn and summoned to attend the court to-day. MRS. YELVERTON'S READINGS last night mor than justified all that has been said of that lady's elecutionary and dramatic powers. She has the great advantage of a voice which is rare indeed, in its strength, clearness, sweetness and flexibility. Excelsior was decidedly striking in dramatic effect, and beautiful and melodious sound; now with a cry like a trumpet, now with an agonized wail, and now in a sad recitative, dying away by gradual descent into a sound so low that "nothing lived 'twixt it and silence." But perhaps her greatest triumph was in her rendering of the terse and pregnant and thought-compressing lines of Looksley Hall, with its romantic picture of a youthful love, its bitter imprecations upon the deceitful object of misplaced affection, its keen enjoyment of promised revenge in allowing the imagination to revel : the prospective miseries of an uncongenial wedlock, its turning for rehef from the peace-consuming phantom of despair to the excitements and turmoil of a life of intensest action, its passionate longing for a retreat in tropic and barbarous lands, its gorgeous description of the scenery and pleasures of those "summer isles of Eden," its sudden rejection of such a resource when the mind reverts to the impossibility of giving up the great blessings of civilization, and its finding of a worthy and a sufficient solace in devotion to the glories of modern science. By the voice and action of the reader, we were made to feel all the power of the wayward and frantis passion that fills its wierd stanzas, the vigor of its scrange and nervous and startling metaphors. The closely-packed significance of the telling lines was brought clearly to our apprehension, and we were made to feel the scope and spirit of the piece as no other presentation of it could have enabled us to do. The other selections were read in an excessively dramatic style of elecution, revealing marked talent for the boards. The interpretations were made upon quite original conceptions of the author's meaning. The intention might sometimes seem exaggerated to those who but imperfectly appreciated the genius of the poem, but the reader was on the whole watchful and studious not to "o'erstep the modesty of nature." She seemed thoroughly absorbed in and imbued with the spirit of what she was reading, and quite self-forgetful. The conception of character was just and discriminating, and its deline in exact and truthful. The articulation was distinct, the voice flexible, melodious, and seemingly capable of adapting itself to the expression of every varied phase in the whole range of human passions. Each word received that just intonation which revealed the sense, round and full and in a manner most satisfying to the ear and to the taste.

The entertainment was one of no ordinary success. The spacious and comfortable drawing-room of the Mansion House, which had been tastefully arranged for the occasion, was filled to its utmost capacity, and at the close of the evening the expressions of delight and appreciation among the audience were universal.

Mr. Dunkin insisted on his motion. The Judge sustained the objection and decided that the inquisition of the Coroner was not evidence for either the State or the defence,

The prosecution having no other witness, and the defence offering no counter testimony, William Whaley, Esq., opened the argument for the prisoner. The Attorney-General for the State and A. H. Dunkin, Esq., fer the defence closing in reply. Judge ldoses charged the jury who after an absence of about ten minutes returned a verdict of "Not Guilty." On motion of A. H. The case of the State vs. Thomas Dolan atias Thomas Daly indicted for Arnon, was then taken up, Messrs. M. P. O'Connor, R. W. Seymour and W. J. Gayer appearing for the deence. The prisoner was put to the bar, but after a number of challenges from his counsel no jury was formed and the court adjourned until 10 A. M. this morning. SALES OF REAL ESTATE.-Messrs. Leitch & Bruns sold yesterday, the brick store at the corner of King and Clifford streets, measuring nineteen feet front by one hundred and fortythree feet deep, for $1350, cash. The purchaser assumed a bond and mortgage on the premises for $2900 in gold. Also the building lot on the west side of Middle-street, between Calhoun and Minority streets, measuring sixty by one hundred and two feet deep, with a two-story dwelling and outbuildings, for $1600. Terms, half cash; balance in twelve months.

A DELEGATE GOES ASTRAY .- One of the colored delegates from the rural parts, who was evidently unused to the wiles of the city, fell among thieves on Thursday night. He was encountered in the market by a white woman named Rose Vernar, better known as Railroad, who requested the loan of ten cents. The delegate, not having received his per diem, was anable to accede to this modest request, but Railroad was "on the make," and watching her opportunity she bagged his watch, and before he could comprehend his situation she was gone. Having heard of the detective office he hastened thither and narrated his loss. Fortunately for the moral delegate, Railroad was a public character, was soon discovered and the watch regained. It is both impolitic and unwise for the members from the "Deestricts" to wander about unprotected; and the unfortunate sufferer should advise his brethren if they go astray from the fold to pocket their watches and watch their pockets at the same time, or they may come to grief.

THE YOUNG MEN'S CHRISTIAN ASSOCIATION have fortunately secured the services of the Rev. J. A. Broadus, D.D., who will deliver a discourse before the association on Sunday and Tuesday nights, at the Citadel Square Baptist Church. Dr. Broadus is a native of Virginia, but for years a resident of this State, and latterly a professor in the Furman University at Greenville. As a pulpit orator he has few superiors, and the Citadel Square Church will scarcely be able to contain the crowds that will attend. The association have been earnest in their endeavors to promote the growth of Christianity, and have enlisted the sympathies of the clergy, who will resume their Sunday evening lectures. Several distinguished divines from other sections of the country will visit the city during the present season, and have been engaged to deliver public lectures for the association. Dr. Broadus will remain in the city for several days, and will be a guest of Mr. T. A.

KEROSENE OIL AND LAMPS .- There is much nquiry on foot at present in regard to the danger or inocuousness of the several products of the oil wells, manufactured for illuminating purposes. Kerosene, coal oil or petrolsum, as the product is indifferently called in different sections of the country, has come into almost universal use. It is cheap, and furnishes an excellent light, and although there is a vague impression that its use is not altogether safe, and although fatal accidents have occurred again and again, yet every one seems to think he or she is safe, because they believe that with proper care these accidents will not occur. We have looked into the matter somewhat, and gathered the following

Crude petroleum is composed of a variety of liquids-some are liquids, some are volatile, at very low, others at higher temperatures. and all of them brought into use. Gasoline, the most volatile passes off first, and is the minutes from 90 degrees to one hundred and ten degrees, or about one degree per minute, and when heated faster than that, the lamp is temporarily withdrawn. Into this oil the bulb of a thermometer is permanently suspended, so that the oil will just cover it. The oil is not stirred nor touched. When the oil has arrived within some five degrees or ten degrees of the point desired, the lamp is withdrawn, and the oil comes up to the desired temperature by the heat of the water of the bath in which it is immersed, care being taken to fit the cup containing the oil tight at the top by means of a lip. If the igniting point obtained is one hundred . ' ten degrees, the flashing point will ge___auly be found some 6 degrees or 10 degrees less; but by rapid heating of the water, or still more where the flame is applied direct, that portion of the oil in immediate contact gets warmer, and the flashing point can be obtained at almost any point, and even igniting at some degrees less. We thus see that much depends upon the reliability of the manufacture. If we buy our kerosene from a regular dealer, of character and standing, who knows his business, we may be reasonably sure that we obtain a good and safe article. There is a great difference also in lamps. As a general thing, those with glass chimneys are deemed least liable to accidents from explosion. Chimneys, however, have a great tendency to crack and break, and there is, in consequence, a great demand for kerosene lamps, without these fragile appendages. In these the burner is usually mounted by a brass cap, which soon becomes hot, and thus creates a current of air sufficient to assist in the combustion of the surplus carbon, set free by the more ready union of the hydrogen of

This should be an absolute rule in all households. Trim your lamps in the day time and every day; fill it every morning, keep your burner clean, and see to it that the wick is long enough to communicate with the oil. Large lamps ought never to be carried about. or if it cannot be avoided, it would be much safer to blow out the light before moving it, and then re-light. Many fail to take the necessary precautions from a belief that unless the light come in actual and visible contact (in filling the lamp at night) with the kerosene running from the oan, no accident can occur. But this is a mistake. The flame may be communicated from the light through the gases

December 23 I have siways recommended the Faber Polygrade Lead Pencils as the only pencils fitted for both ornamental and mathematical drawing; but, after a thorough trial of the American Polygrade Lead Pencils, manufactured by the American Lead Pencils, Company, New York, I find them superior to any pencil in use, even to the Faber or the old English Cumberland Lead Pencil, being a superior pencil for sketching, ornamental and mechanical drawing, and all the ordinary uses of a lead pencil.

These pencils are very finely graded and have a very snooth lead; even the sottest pencils hold the point well; they are all that can be desired in a pencil. It gives me great pleasure to be able to assure Americans that they will no longer be compelled to depend upon Germany or any other foreign market for pencils.
