SARGENT'S PERFORMANCE,-The exhibition which was to have been presented by this gentleman on Wednesday did not take place, the weather being unpropitious, and other causes making it an unsuitable time, but it will be noticed that he will give a grand matinee on this afternoon, at the Hibernian Hall, at three o'clock, for the benefit of the Ladies' Mutual Aid Association. The use to which the proceeds of the exhibition is to be applied will commend it to the patronage of all.

THE LOWER GUARDHOUSE .- The municipal authorities have determined that the improvements now in progress shall not be confined to the more public buildings and streets, but that city property shall also reap a share of the benefit. There are few persons who have visited the guarahouse and have failed to remark the dilapidated appearance of the interior. The courtroom was once papered to resemble oak, but this has now become tarnished by age and is broken in many places, causing unsightly holes. The dormitories and other portions of the building are in the same condition. It was full time to effect the needed improvements. Yesterday morning men were at work on the exterior under the direction of Mr. Callaghan, and the old dingy hue will soon be changed for a more pleasing color. The courtroom and other portions of the building will receive the same attention, and be made to present a more creditable appearance.

A PRESSING WANT-A NEW MARKET .- When the City Fathers, in the plenitude of their wisdem, decided that the markets should be closed at nine in the morning, they could not have taken into consideration the distance that some of the residents of the upper wards would have to walk to reach the goal in time. The northeastern section of the city is so remote from the market, that people in that quarter are compelled to be the earliest risers, and do some of the tallest walking on record, if they wish to save their bacon. There are only two markets in the city, and the upper is only accessible to those who live in the northwestern section. The legislators of olden time were impartial, and granted to the citizens of each section the same privilege. A branch market was established at the east end of Calhounstreet, and continued for many years to be extensively patronized. It was discontinued when the new up-town market was built, and the northeast residents had to artend one of the remaining markets, both being inconveniently distant. Since the recent change in the market hours, it has been found almost impossible for these ill-used people to make their visits in time. Another market is imperatively demanded, and as the city owns several lots in the northeast section, the arrangement might

The second day of the sale of the assets of the above institution, at the Courthouse yesterday, attracted even a larger crowd than assembled the day previous. THE ELECTION .- The second day of the election for the new constitution passed off very quietly. The rain proved rather a damper on the enthusiasm of the newly registered, and the morning hours were comparatively idle. The managers at Ward No. 4 persist in denying voters the right to deposit their own ballots, and the same is duly taken by a man and a brother, who remains within the railing and places it in the box. Our people should remember that this is the the last day of the election. Wonders can be accomplished in twelve hours, and every regstered white voter should avail himself of the present opportunity to cast his vote against the constitution.

AN UNWELCOME RAID .- Yesterday morning while the buggy of Mr. Devereax was standing before Messrs. Dawson & Blackman's drug store, in Broad-street, it was surreptitiously taken possession of by an unknown individual, and driven off rapidly to foreign parts. Mr. Devereux soon discovered his loss, and notification was given to the police, who mounted their steeds and skirmished over the city in pursuit of the thief. After much racing and chasing, and a general inspection of the roads leading from the city, the cavalry returned discomfitted, and proclaimed that the thief was non est inventus. Later in the day Mr. Deveroux's heart was cheered by the announcement that the lost had been found, the honest thicf having left the buggy and horse at a livery stable, subject to the call of the owner.

The apartment itself, without adornment, is perhaps one of the most elegant in the City of Charleston; and our readers can imagine better duced by an array of brilliantly illuminated tables, whereon flowers and crystal and silver created ever changing contrasts of color in light and shade. Both ends of the room were festooned with flags, and above the head of the president, draped in the same material, was inscribed the bold and handsome motto, "When commerce flourishes, prosperity

The amount of energy expended in disposing of the above provender was simply immense. For two hours or more, the gastronomic exercises were incessant, the rattle of plates, and salutations of champagne, interrupted only by the strains of melody from the band, being the

In response to this toast, Right Rev. Bishop Lynch being called upon, rose amid loud applause, and said that the task of responding to the sentiment had been so suddenly imposed upon him, that he felt embarrassed by the position, and would have been doubly embarrassed did he not feel that such a response should come from the heart rather than the head. Who had not reason to be proud of South Carolina-of her history-of her judges, whose ermine had ever been unstained-of a people open-hearted and open-handed-of a past that was written all over with glorious memories? to man could charge her with dishonor. In her darkest hours she had remained honest and true. Although in tribulation, her people had never lost hope, had never despaired, but, on the contrary, had bent their energies to the work of regeneration, and persevered in that well-doing which must finally bring with it prosperity and success. The grand future of the State, said Eishop Lynch, depended much upon emigration. We need men to people our soil; men who will work; men whose labor will develope our strength and richness. The olden times have passed away. We must provide for the altered circumstances of the present. And I have been encouraged in the belief that we may do so by the letters which I have received from abroad. And yet I regret that I could not give such answers as I wished, because I could conscientiously advise no man to come here unless I am sure that coming here he would better himself. I may say that within the last ten days I have received two important letters from Europe, from persons writing in behalf of a number who have chosen South Carolina as the first State in which they propose to com-

For, sir, the sentiment which you had proposed is a theme rich in topics calling for treatment in the very highest discourse; topics better left by the unready tongue to topics better left by the dineary thoughts lips gifted with power to pour forth "thoughts that breathe, and words that burn." It is the theme to which have rung the most thrilling chords of eloquence and song. It is the theme which inspired the marvellous Greek when he which inspired the marvellous Greek when he thundered against Philip of Macedon; which kindled the noble rage of Tully when he declaimed against Cataline; which was not irreverently assigned its rank in the dying words of the great cardinal when he solemnly admonshed Cromwell, "Let all the ends thou aim'st at be thy country's, thy God's and truth's;" which went, appermost in his mind, to the scaffold with Sidney, and which filled the thoughts of Madame Roland as she smiled at the guillotine. It is the theme which indexes all that for which were contributed the wisdom and the toils of Washington and Marion, of Adams and Rutledge, of Jefferson and Pinckney; and it is that which constitutes the grand key-note of the strains to which, before Heaven, I march with those who carry the flag and keep step to with those who carry the flag and keep step to the music of the Union.

with those who carry the flag and keep step to the music of the Union.

My country! one and indivisible once more, forever! No longer the feeble association of colonies, but, in less than a century, grown to an empire, wide as the continent, rich as nature can make nations, and free as the air which fans in the breezes of the oceans, the starry emblems of her more than imperial sovereignty,—nay, every returning anniversary of your important and influential organization ind increasing, in all the elements of genuine brotherhood, the relations which enable us to meet upon the common footing of friends in he glory of our nationality.

Upon such a theme, did not my unpreparedness absolutely forbid me to detain you from the better things which are to follow, it would be my pleasure to try to say something more like what the occasion demands. But you will agree with me in thinking it proper not to longer keep you from enjoyments in store. Mr. President, if there is a thought or desire nearest to my heart, it is for the welfare sire nearest to my heart, it is for the welfare and prosperity of the City of Charleston—here, where is concentrated all that we love and all that can make lite desirable for the future—and I hold that man in but light regard who, from local or other prejudices, would oppose her progress, or who looks with scorn and suspicion upon the worthy stranger who comes among us, bringing with him the will to labor or the means to add to the common welfare.

The speaker then proceeded to give his views with regard to the political and social future of the South, predicting the speedy downfall of party despotism, to be followed by an era of peace and prosperity. His remarks were in-terrupted by frequent outbursts of applause.

The Judiciary of South Carolina: Hitherto the whiteness of their ermine hath never been soiled. It is our trust that, whatever the events in the future, the past shall always suffice to give lessons of purity to the present.

To this sentiment Cnancellor Lesesne reponded as follows:

Mn. President: I cheerfully accept the part in this imposing celebration, of acknowledging, on behalf of the judiciary of the State, the toast you have just announced. It expresses respect for the memory of those who have filled the judicial office in times past, and also approval of the present incuments as a holy.

filled the judical office in times past, and also approval of the prosent incumbents as a body. When I call to mind the names of the former, and think of the learning, ability, elevation and incorruptible integrity which illustrated their high functions, I not only sympathize with you in the sentiment of respect, but also feel unfeigned modesty in occupying the position of a successor. Their published judgments are enduring memorials of their eminence; and it is matter of history that no motive has ever been surmised, as influencing any nence; and it is matter of history that no mo tive has ever been surmised, as influencing any of their decisions, save an earnest desire to administer justice according to law. Approval of the present incumbents, declar-ed on such an occasion as this, and coming from those by whom I am surrounded, permi-me to assure you, gentlemen, imparts sincer-gratification. I shall not regard it as unmean ing compliment, for none are more competer than the mercantile community to estimate sound and intelligent court-none more in terested in the proper performance of it luties.

The fact that our judiciary has commanded public considence is very significant. The stable tenure by which the judge held his place, rendering him independent of favor, as it did, was not in itself caleniated to secure popularity. But on the other hand, it invested the office with a responsibility and dignity which made it a prize worthy the aspiration of trusted men, who were superior to the aims of vulgar ambition. And it is notorious that its emoluments are far interior to the rewards of the successful practioner of the law.

Those, however, who in the providence of God now coulred our public affairs, deem it proper to institute a great change in the feature to which I have referred. Heaven grant that it do not prove a great mistake. The work of the same reformers, too, permit me to add, gives to the remarks, which I will now conclude, the character of a valedictory address; and in taking my leave, gentlemen, I beg you to accept my thanks for the honor you have done me, and to allow me to offer this toast:

To this sentiment Mr. Rhett, of the Mercury, briefly responded.

The Ingoing and Outcoming Presidents of the Board of Trade: The one leaving a fine example to the other, of suavity, dignity and general ability in the conduct of our Board; the other affording us, through long experience, a grateful promise that he will not fall short of the example of his predecessor. Mr. Edward M. Marshall responded to this sentiment at length, giving a history of the organization of the Board of Trade and a description of the influences which it has exerted during the past three years. He concluded his remarks by earnestly recommending that under no circumstances whatever should politics be permitted to enter into the organization, but that on the contrary, men of all classes, no matter what their political opinions might be, should be welcomed as members of the Board. W. L. Trenholm, Esq., the President elect. was then loudly called for, and made a long and thoughtful speech, in which he declared that his aim, as the chief of the organization, would be to enhance the prosperity of the city and increase the benefits to be derived from mercantile and other operations. "We are now," he said, "entering upon a new careerone which required us to avail ourselves of all the lessons of the past, and yet not omit the great advantages of the present. The present is ours, and by proper exertion the fature we could command." Three things were, in his opinion, essential to our success. First, we want population in the city and the country. We have more acres than we can people, and more resources than tre can develope. Secondly, we want a proper railroad system, one which will concentrate its traffic in in Charleston, which is the natural recipient of the productions of the State. Finally, we want capital. Before the war we had fifteen million dollars in gold in bank; now we have half a million in greenbacks. To get capital we must offer every inducement to men of wealth, energy and enterprise to come and live among us. Then we must make a great bank. When we drew cotton from the Mississippi and the slopes of the Blue Ridge, it was not in response to a sentiment. We drew it by the power of our banking capital, which established the commercial prosperity of Charleston upon an enduring basis. Merchants did not come here because they liked us better than other people, but because it was their interest to do so. Finally, said Mr. Trenholm, if you will give me your support in this matter, my humble efforts will be directed to achieve such practical results and enhance the prosperity of Charleston. In concluding, Mr. Trenholm introduced one of the vice-presidents, Mr. Jno. B. Steele, who spoke as follows: MR. PRESIDENT AND MEMBERS OF THE BOARD of Thade—I thank my superior officer for the very high compliment he has paid me, and I thank you all heartily for the manner in which you have endorsed it. It would be, gentlemen, in me affectation to say that I do not fock here.

you have endorsed it. It would be gentlemen, in me affectation to say that I do not feel honored in occupying this chair.

I look back to-night two years ago, when this Board was organized, and when I cast my eyes over this vast assemblage, and see to what an extent this association has grown, I congratulate myself that I took an active part in its Inexperienced as I am in such a position, I shall make no promises other than to perform my duties faithfully and to the best of my ability. I think it a very good clause in our constitution that the vice-president is eligible only for one term, so that if I fail to give satisfaction your endurance will be short.

faction your endurance will be short.

To you, gentlemen, one and all, I must be permitted again to express my gratitude for the unanimous call extended to me as vice-president of this Board, and for the handsome terms employed by my predecessor (who is de-barred from being with us this evening), the barred from being with as this venting, the day of our anniversary, in presenting me to the members.

I trust that all of you that are now here will live to see the day when Charleston will have regained her former position. "She still lives," and the energy of her citizens will yet make her first and foremost of the Southern cities in trade, in commerce, agriculture and manufactures.

tinue to exhibit renewed evidences of the progress which had marked her career during the past three years.

Brief addresses were now made, in response to calls, by Rev. W. B. Yntes, Hon. M. C. Mordecai, Hon. P. C. Gaillard, Gen. W. W. Burns, and others, and at half-past twelve o'clock the meeting adjourned. UNITED STATES COURT, APRIL 15-Hon. GEO.

That Trampet.

To the Editors of the Daily News: Yesterday's papers noticed the fact that a trumpet was on exhibition at Messrs. Hayden & Co.'s store, intended as a present for one of our brave firemen. Being an old ex-fireman myself, my heart always warms towards any movement tending to encourage and foster an institution of which our whole community is so justly proud. I must confess, however, my apprehension is not perfectly clear as to the description of fireman this handsome tribute is intended for. One notice states it is a heavy fireman's trumpet: another a silver fireman's trumpet. Which is right? I am not naturally very curious, yet I do not like to hang on the horn of a dilemma. Doubtless preference should always be given in the distribution of rewards to firemen of metal, but great injustice would be committed in discriminating between heavy and light weights. I am sensitive on that subject. TROMBONE
