One of the largest and strongest iron-clad vessels built in England for a foreign government was successfully launched on the 25th ult. She was originally built for the Turkish Government, but was subsequently purchased by the Prussian Government, to whom she now belongs. She is six thousand tons, and built to carry no less than twenty-six three hundred-pounders, all made of Krupp's hammered steel, and all capable of being fired with seventy-five pound charges as often as twice a minute. She is expected to go to sea from thirteen to fourteen knots per hour.

The young Prince Imperial has a gorgeous prayer-book for use at his first communion. It is a splendid manuscript, which an artist, the most renowned in France, has written from beginning to end with that prodigious patience so remarkable in the monks of the Middle Ages. It is ornamented all through with drawings and illuminated vignettes in the style of the sixteenth century. The book contains one hundred and twenty-five pages, of which thirty are truly remarkable—one especially, the title-page, in the centre of every capital rises or curls a leaf, a flower or a bird; the gold which is laid in certain squares is either very lustrous, dim or dotted, and appears to be an incrustation rather than applied.

One of the most horrible conspiracies of modern times, had its denouement in Indiana last week. Seven men had entered into a written conspiracy to wreck and rob the pay train on the Jeffersonville Railroad. The particulars are as follows: A written agreement was drawn up, setting forth the plan of the robbery. This plan contemplated the throwing of the pay train from the track, at a point some ten miles out from Jeffersonville, the murder, if necessary, of all those upon the train, and the robbery of the paymaster's safe of its contents, which it was thought would be from twenty-five to thirty thousand dollars. The article of agreement was of the most terrible character. It bound each conspirator to commit murder as well as robbery. It also stipulated that if any of the conspirators were wounded in the affair so as to be unable to get away, his companions were to kill him, and thus put it out of his power to inform against them. It was also agreed that if there were more than the usual number of persons with the train, that the conspirators were to fire upon and kill them just as the train was reaching the place where it was to be wrecked. The details of the whole affair were set forth in the most concise and distinct manner, and the spoils were duly apportioned in advance. One of the conspirators became frightened at the contemplated crime, and gave information which led to the arrest of all but two of the guilty parties, and a wholesale murder and robbery was thus prevented.

Spiritualism is on its trial in London in the person of that most marvellously favored of its embodied representatives, Daniel D. Home. The story of Mr. Home's fortunate windfall, in the shape of an immediate plum of $300,000 and the prospective inheritance of $750,000, is well known. Mrs. Lyon, however, purposes to make a sequel which will not be so pleasant. She repeats her hasty liberality, and brings suit to undo it. As she tells the story, when her husband was on his death-bed in 1839, and she, firmly believing in his prescience, expected death at that time. Falling in with a spiritualist, however, she was informed that it was not necessary to die in order to meet her husband, but simply to visit Home's Athenaeum. This she did, and under the great medium's potent fingers the happy rapped out: "My own beloved Jane I am Charles, your beloved husband; I live to bless you, my own precious darling. I am with you always. I love, love, love you." Furthermore it continued: "I love Daniel; he is to be your son; he is my son, therefore yours." Ecstatically knocking up its legs, the table proceeded to announce its complete happiness at the state of affairs. Mr. Home took it upon himself to explain more fully the wishes of the spirit, to the effect that Mrs. Lyon should destroy her existing will and make another in favor of the medium, bequeathing him everything she possessed. Home assumed her name in writing to his own, the will was made, and he was put out of danger of immediate want by the gift of $300,000. Mrs. Lyon was well advanced in life, and Home was within a short distance of becoming a millionaire, when the lady awoke from the spell, began to think herself foolish, and then instituted the present suit, in which she alleges that the transfer of property was made under undue influence, and that hence she wants it back. The will she has doubtless changed already. Home replies that, if Mrs. Lyon was imposed upon, it was by genuine phenomena in which millions of intelligent persons believe, and further insinuates that suit is brought because he will not marry his benefactress. Vice Chancellor Gifford is to bring his intellect to bear upon the case, and the result of this spiritual suit in English chancery may be looked for with interest.

Mr. Rink's romance; this is one of the aims of an historical novel. The translation is sufficiently well done, but does not reproduce all the point and vigor of the original German.

This novel is worthy of the fame of its author. The "course of true love" is a fertile subject, and the changes of scene and diversity of character give room for a display of the most valued peculiarities of Miss Katanaghi's style. It is well and neatly printed.

Not Worth, but Too Well. By the Author of "Cometh up like a Flower." New York: D. Appleton & Co. Charleston: John Russell.

This is a somewhat crude but thrilling and fascinating novel. It is well worth perusal by the lovers of strong sensational writing.

CHARLESTON.

THURSDAY MORNING, MAY 14, 1868.

Delay is Safety.

The Conservative Ward meetings held on Tuesday night did not get together. Each Ward appointed delegates to the convention of all the Wards which is to nominate a Mayor, but only three Wards made nominations for Aldermen. There was but little active concert of purpose, and it does seem that many of the electors are more interested in securing a pet nomination than in working for the common good. This is widely different from the manner in which the Radical strength is wielded, and unless the white Conservative party are prepared to adopt the Republican principle of voting solidly for the nominees of the party, their organization will be of no importance, force, or value.

In three of the Conservative Ward meetings referred to, resolutions were adopted instructing the nominating convention to use their own discretion as to the time of making a nomination. This seemed supererogatory, as the convention had not been ordered to meet, or nominate, upon any particular day; but the resolutions can do no harm, and are of value as a manifestation of the feeling that at this time FAVORABLE LETTERS—"Hasten slowly,"—is our safest motto.

The Republicans have not yet made their formal nominations. They are aware that the white element is opposed to them, but they have been told often that a moderate Republican nomination would carry with it a considerable white vote, as well as the united support of the colored people. They feel that they can count upon a general vote for whoever may be the regular nominees of the party, but they may feel disposed to conciliate the white element by selecting persons as candidates who have not made themselves especially obnoxious. Many influences are at work that may affect the character of the Republican nominations; and these influences will be of no avail if the Conservatives are too eager to show their hand.

The Conservative strength is limited. It cannot control the elections. At best it can only serve as the nucleus around which may crystallize political parties which have no centre of their own. The Conservatives, therefore, have nothing to gain by hot haste. If they are united, their vote will be cast for their nominees whoever they may be; if they are divided, it matters not who are nominated, for not one of their nominees will be elected.

It is said, of course, that the Conservative nominee for Mayor should be before the public, so that his claims may be scrutinized and his eligibility canvassed. This is not the way in which candid men should talk. The nomination for Mayor must be confirmed in mass meeting, and that will be scrutiny and canvass enough. If a nomination be made at once and the nomination, as is probable, should be an unwise one, it will consolidate the opposing party, and make them so cohesive that no Conservative wedge can separate them. If, on the other hand, the nomination be deferred, the Republicans will be doubting and undecided, and the expectation of the coming Conservative nomination will do far more good in securing the consideration of moderate counsel than would be done by any actual nomination, whatever its intrinsic prudence and propriety. At this time delay is safety, and headlong hurry is danger.

Literary Notices.

DAVID, THE KING OF ISRAEL: A Portrait drawn from Bible History and the Book of Psalms. By Frederick William Kraumacher, D. D., author of "Elijah, the Tishbite, &c. Translated, under the express sanction of the author, by the Rev. M. G. Estlin, M. A. New York: Harper & Brothers, 1868. Charleston: John Russell.

The name of KRAUMACHER is a sufficient recommendation of this book. All readers who have enjoyed "Elijah, the Tishbite," which is so universally popular, will be prepared for the pleasure and instruction which they will meet with in this new work by the venerable and beloved German divine, whose name, in so many families, is a household word. It is only necessary to say that he has not, in this volume, fallen below himself. The style is simple and attractive, the narrative graphic, the thoughts pious and profound. The portrait is drawn by a master, and the pencil is dipped in the colors of heaven. Christian experience is beautifully developed, and the life of faith delineated with truth and power. The interest of the volume grows as it proceeds, and no one will easily lay it aside until it is read through.
