In Liverpool, yesterday, cotton closed dull at 11 1/2 for uplands. Sales 8700 bales. The Louisville Courier, of the 1st, contains General Buckner's modest announcement of his accession to the editorial staff of that able journal.

A Radical paper confesses that Mr. Vernon is going to decay. Eight years of Radicalism have undone the work of Washington; why not neglect his grave?

The Angusta Chronicle and the Angusta Constitutionalist both warmly support the claims of Mr. Pendleton to the Democratic nomination.

Mr. Pendleton authorizes the withdrawal of his name as a Presidential candidate, whenever another candidate evinces superior strength. Gen. Hancock has done the same. Nobly done.

"Dan" Voorhees intends to run for Congress in his, the sixth, Indiana district. Four Republicans are in the field for the nomination.

Mr. Hoe, the inventor of the cylinder press, whose patent (twenty-one years) expires in July, is in Washington asking for a renewal, upon the ground that he has not been sufficiently compensated.

The State Department is in receipt of intelligence to the effect that Dennis O'Connor, the last imprisoned American citizen in Ireland, has been released, and is now on his way to the United States.

Tobacco and religion, according to Brigham Young, are decidedly antagonistic. In a recent sermon to the Mormons, Mr. Young stated that as the Saints grow in grace and wisdom they denounce the use of tobacco, and that by and by the weed would be altogether abandoned.

Western journals are urging the necessity of planting forest trees as a remedy for the hurricanes that so often devastate the prairie regions. They are not sure that forests would prove a remedy, but wish to try the experiment, which would decide the matter in the course of thirty or forty years.

California will eventually become a great wine country. Los Angeles county has 14,000,000 grape vines, which last year produced 1,600,000 gallons of wine, and 150,000 gallons of brandy. The vine of Anaheim, besides many grape vines, has a plain upon which are growing 10,000 choice fruit trees of various descriptions.

The telegraph is becoming a formidable rival to the postoffice. In 1855, the British postoffice conveyed 447,000,000 letters, and the telegraph companies transmitted 1,000,000 telegrams. In 1865, the telegraph companies transmitted 5,000,000 telegrams, and the postoffice only 300,000,000 letters, or an increase of 58 per cent.

The production of wool on a large scale in Algeria is attracting the attention of the French Government. A report has recently been published by M. Tissandier, Director of the Agricultural establishments, in which he contends that merino sheep should be introduced into Algeria, which would then become the Australia of France.

"RECOLLECTIONS OF A SOUTHERN MATRON AND A NEW ENGLAND BRIDE," by Caroline Gilman. Philadelphia: G. W. Bradley.

It is in the tenderness with which all men recur to the scenes, persons, events and customs of their own past, that is to be found an explanation of the great success of many distinguished works of fiction. It is also the avowed strength of this feeling which complicates the interesting question of art, as to the correct principle which should regulate the novelist in choosing the point, both in space and time, and in which his dramatic persons shall make their appearance.

Whether prose fiction derives most interest from the presentation of scenes beyond our experience, or of those of our remote experience, or of those of our immediate present, is certainly a problem, but it is not one which our present purpose demands any solution; it is enough for us to obtain the admission that the novelist who deals with the past that is beginning to fade behind his readers has selected, if not the best, at least one of the best, fields for the exercise of his skill.

We have briefly indicated the grounds upon which we think such a book as Mrs. Gilman's "Recollections of a Southern Matron" may be expected to be especially delightful to those who read it by the bosom of that broad stream and almost beneath the spreading arches where its action lies. It is a story of life on the coast of South Carolina, and principally in Charleston and its vicinity, in the early part of this century, and its merits is to have presented a lifelike picture of its original invested with the charm that fancy knows how to weave around objects the most familiar, without destroying their identity. The planter's home in town and country, his career in all its phases, his character and inner life, and the actual workings of slavery, are here described with an accuracy that gives to Mrs. Gilman's book historical value. That all these things are passed away as entirely as if we looked back upon them over a century of change; that the Ashley only mirrors the ruins of homesteads, its woods hear no huntsman's horns, and the tender grace of a by-gone day has departed from it forever, will give new zest to the fiction that portrays the "Southern Matron" will delight both those who were a part of the past, and hold it now in tender remembrance, and those whose curiosity impels to examine the records of a type of civilization that perhaps constitutes an anomaly in the history of our globe.

omally in the history of our globe. And it is no small boast for a community so young as ours, that its customs, habits and characteristics have been not only rescued from oblivion, but that this labor of love has fallen to the share of one who has been able to clothe them with the fascinations of romance.

The new edition of the "Southern Matron," which has suggested this notice, includes another work by Mrs. Gilman, "The Northern Bride," descriptive of life at the North, and is preceded by an engraving of Mrs. Gilman's cottage on Sullivan's Island, which was removed to make place for Battery Bee.

The book can be ordered at any bookseller's.

A VERY good exemplification of the influence of cheapness as an element of success in the newspaper business, is given in an article from the New York News, printed in another column. That sprightly little sheet, several editions of which are issued every afternoon, is sold at one cent a copy; and although it is scarcely twelve months since its publication was begun upon its present plan, its daily circulation has already reached the enormous figure—unprecedented among American newspapers—of one hundred thousand copies.

The Charleston News is already the cheapest first-class newspaper in the South, and has a circulation not exceeded, if equalled, by the high-priced dailies of the Crescent City.
