in Austria and Hungary. -An interesting case has just been decided by the Superior Court at Baltimore. John Q. A. Haddaway brought suit against the firm of H. S. Shryock & Son, to recover the sum of $15,000 for introducing that firm during the war to the medical purveyor of the department, ring that Shryock & Co. had agreed to give him a commission on all the goods they sold · to the government through the purveyor, as tion for introducing them. The firm denied that they made such an agreement, and their counsel asked the court to instruct the jury that if even such a bargain had been made. the plaintiff was not entitled to recover, because such a contract was against sound morals and public policy. The judge concurred in this view of the matter, and so instructed the jury red a verdict for the defendants.

-An English tailor who visited the Paris blished a kind of report of his observations of tailoring exhibited there, in which, the Austrian contributions in that department gain his highest praise. He goes on give some account of the tailor in Paris, the majority of whom he says are Germans. They go there poor workmen, but turn out good tailors, with a fair understanding of the language, no obstacle being too great for them ount. Their passion for travel is great he says, and they generally travel all over Eu-rope, being found in every town and village. "The British Tales they know almost every corner of, and when they accomplish a good ing of the English language they are off . He says that, secording to the evidence taken before the Constitutional Convention last fall, Mr. Gree-ley not only shocked but disgusted his fellowmbers by his terrible blasphemy and profanity. Upon this he comments: "There is some slight excuse for a man who occasionally makes a fool of himself by the, too free use of intoxicating drinks, but there is no excuse for a man who is habitually profane and takes the name of God in vain." In addition to all this, we are told that Greeley, "when he attends Divine service, falls fast asleep and disturbs the congregation, and the Sabbath by a trombone performance on his nasal organ." These Radicals seem to be as unpleasant as they are

-A most atrocioss and cold-blooded mu was committed in Raleigh, Tennessee, on the 4th inst. Wednesday evening one John Lanahan came h me intoxicated and commenced abusing his wife, when a visitor at the house Captain Matt. Dwyer, interfered and knocked him down. No further demonstrations were made on either side, and the party retired to rest. Early the next morning, however, Lanahan arose, dressed himself, obtained an axe, and left the house. He cut wood a short time and them returned, bringing the weapon with him. He proceeded stealthily to Dwyer's room, where the Captain and a boy were oundly sleeping. Carelessly walking to Dwyer's bed, he suddenly raised the axe and dealt the unconscious victim a powerful blow. The sharp weapon was buried to the handle in the captain's neck nearly severing the head from the shoulders, and producing instant death. The boy, awakened by the blow prang out of bed only to discover Dwyer a bloody corpse, and the bed crimsoned with rore. A man in another bed was awake when Canahan entered, but paid no attention to the murderer until the bloody work had been accomplished. Before recovering from the horror with which the ghastly spectacle filled him, the murderer again coolly threw the axe, still dripping with blood, over his shoulder and left the room. He returned to his wife's apartment carefully washed and redressed himself, putting on a clean shirt, and left the house care lessly as if nothing had happened. The alarm was quickly raised, and soon after the murderer was placed in confinement and now awaits trial.

CHARLESTON.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JUNE 17, 1868.

sampe the Russian and you Find the Tartar." | Napolcon L.

Czar Perze's Moscow sign post, "This way to Constantinople !" is temporarily forgotten, and on the Southern peak of the Ural Mountains is now planted a shield upon which is inscribed, "This way to the heart of England." The huge idea of the civilized Napoleon has been seized by a nation of barbarians, and the plans for the downfall of "perfidious Albion," formed on the banks of the Seine, are being fashioned into results on the icy shores of the Neva. Russia, checked, but not subdued, by the Crimean blunder, has turned her mighty finger towards those who were the cause of her defeat, and the Gallic Eagle and English Lion have driven the Bear from the "sick man's" couch only to find him hugging to his breast the frontier towns of gorgeous British India.

So far, Russia has been successful. There were warrior chieftains to kill, mountain astnesses to destroy, seeds of rebellion to stamp out, and modest Europe would not object to the automatic soldiery of the Czar finding a congenial employment near the hitter Sea of Aral. But the Muscovite knows not where to halt. Success has followed success, advance has followed advance, and now in the capture of Bokhara and Samarcand Russia throws down the gauntlet to the conquerors of India. Constantinople is flanked. It is now the question of English rule in India, not of Mussulman rule in Turkey, and the attention of Parliament has already been directed to the far off yet close at hand danger. The Czar, when asked, will roar as gently as a sucking dove .- will assure his good cousin that ideas of personal aggrandizement never entered his head, that Queen VICTORIA is a voman after his own heart; and will continue to declare and protest that he has no intention of doing harm, until he can at one blow accomplish his purpose and, at the same time, justify his words by declaring that it was all for the relief of an oppressed nationality—all for the good of the people.

Russia cannot, at this moment, afford to go o war with Europe or any one of the great powers. The emancipation and enfranchisement of the serfs-a measure considered and determined on by the Czar Peter, but allowed to sleep when death passed him to sleep-has shocked the Empire to its core. An old order of things is gone; the new order has not come. The country is in a transition state, and has not the full command of its money and muscle. Men do not doubt, in Russia, the wisdom of emancipating the slaves, but the gain cannot be had in an hour or in a year. Trade is improving; the capitalthat great mockery where the flowers of the tropics and the painted Parisian are separated by a marble wall from the sheepskinned Mujik, the knout of the police, the anguishing cold of an Arctic winter-is becoming more prosperous, the pear shaped peasantry are more cheerful and as dirty as of yore, the soldier still bends to his officer and cries that the "Czar is near and God is far;" but the Empire is unsound, and for years to come dare not go to war unless in defence of national existence. But the day will come when her voice may be heard, when the revolutionary liberty of America may be joined to the infinite despotism of Russia;-then will be seen the tug of war which shall decide whether Europe is to be Republican or Russian." The battles on the Indus and in the gorges of the Himalayas may be contemporaneous with naval combats in the Black Sea, and guerilla fights along the line of the Carpathians.

Then will the Russ Bite hard and hug tight;

then will it be determined whether surface civilization shall rule the world; then shall it be known whether despotism or rational freedom is to be the fate of the universe Russia never halts for long, and so great nation must have a success that shall be wondrous, or a fall that shall be sublime.

THE ARTIST'S DREAM. A Novel, by Ellerton Vincent. New York: Carleton & Co. Charles-ton: John Russell.

"The Artist's Dream" has not impresse us very powerfully. Why it is called "a novel" it is difficult to imagine, for it is lacking in nearly every essential of that species of literature. It has neither plot, dialogue nor "situation," and might have been brought to an .end at any one of the fifty-one chapters that compose it, without perceptible injury to the slight thread of story which runs through them without connecting them in any unity other than that of dullness.

A party of young ladies and gentlemen together with several children, occupy themselves in discussing and quoting poetry, history, philosophy and mythology, with marvellous impartiality, and apparently with no other aim than to instruct the reader and each other, and to eke out the three hundred and seventy-two pages which are necessary to swell the volume to the regulation size. Some of the chapters read like weak dilutions of "Peter Parley" and "Magnall's Questions," while others might have been quoted verbatim from any handbook of art on the writer's shelves. Here is a specimen of a familiar conversation between one of the children and her governess, and is fair indication of both the style and material of the book:

"How many men did General Washing ron employ in the siege of Yorktown ?" "Sixteen thousand French and Americans Lord CORNWALLIS had strongly fortified Yorktown and Gloucester Point; but the allied forces soon made his army feel the effects of their batteries. A frigate of forty-four guns and several large vessels were set on fire by their shells and red-hol balls. They assaulted and carried the enemy's works, and reduced them to such an extremity that Earl Connwallis determined, if possible, to escape to New York. He failed, and was compelled to surrender Yorktown and Gloucester, with their garrisons, to the commander-in-chief. The loss of the Americans during the siege was three hundred in killed and wounded. That of the enemy five hundred and fifty-four, and seven thousand prisoners."

Rather a long-winded answer; but the young lady seems to like it, for we have page after page of the same didactic conversation on every conceivable subject. Perhaps our readers may be inclined to think that the book offers a convenient and popular mode of acquiring information on he topics treated of; but unfortunately Mr. or Miss Ellerton Vincent's ideas on history are, some of them, so peculiar that we hesitate to recommend the book even in this respect. For instance, we learn that "the reign" of ANNE BOLEYN "led to the establishment of the Protestant religion in England,"-that Washington was a greater general than Naroleon,-that C.ESAR'S habits were depraved; with various other pieces of information as striking as they are original. Nearly a third of the book is made up of poetical quotations, some of them very good, others infinitely poor. "Hohenlinden" and "The Burial of Sir JOHN MOORE" are quoted in full. They may be new to some of the readers of the

As we have said before, the story is lite rally nit. The characters intermarry every ging interest, and die, for the most part, in the last three or four chapters. Altogether we can say of the book, in words which sum up admirably its excellences and its defects, that "what there is true in it is not new, and what there is new in it is not true.'

MR. YATES has let the cat out of the bag, and demands that the Radical concern shall show its band, as it did not do at Chicago. "Not one rule" -- says the Illinois senator -for Ohio and Pennsylvania, and another rule for Georgia and Alabama, but universal and unqualified black suffrage everywhere established by the power of "Congress." "That," says the Boston Post, "of course, is what the Radicals are at; but to propitiate Northern voters, such as those of Ohio and Michigan, they adopted a two faced resolution in their Convention. If they carry this election, the suffrage which YATES speaks for will be sure to come, and the States, instead of being self-"governing, are in the hands of a Congres-"sional oligarchy, and at its mercy in the

THE RADICALS are so little enthusiastic themselves that they have some virtuous enthusiasm to spare for their Democratic brethren. They count more on the weakness of the Democrats than upon their own strength. One day they deery HANCOCK and declare that he is no sta'esman. Another day they show how inconsistent it will be for the Democrats to choose Judge CHASE. On a third they hope that PENDLEroy will be nominated because he will be such an easy candidate to beat. Their talk is wholly about their opponents; they have not a word of cheer for their friends.

SEE To what Radical legislation has brought our debt and cur taxation! The paper money of Russia is 12 per cent. discount, of Italy 15 per cent., of Turkey 20 per cent , of the United States 40 per cent. The taxes in France are $7 97 per head, in England $10 92 per head, and in the United States $16 00 per head.

COTION, CORN, WHEAT AND GENERAL CROPS.

A S A TOP DRESSING TO A GROWING CROP THIS FERTILIZER cannot be excelled. It may be used before or after the planting of the crop; for even when applied as a top dressing, it cannot be lost by evaporation, as none of its constituents are volatile. It may be applied at each hoeing of cotton, and in the hills during the cultivation of corn and other cgop. When crops have been previously manured in the usual way, and found to be of sluggish growth, it may be augmented by the use of this Perlinzer.

Low water in steam bollers is no unusual occurrence. Imminent danger frequently arises from this cause, and it cannot be too forcibly impressed upon the minds of engineers, that there is no part of the apparatus constituting the mountings of a boller which requires greater attention than that which supplies it with water. In a properly constructed boiler every part of the metal exposed to the action of the fire should be in immediate contact with the water, and when proper provision is made to maintain the water at a sufficient height above the parts so exposed, accidents can never occur from this cause. Should the water, however, get low from defects in the pump, and the surface over the fire become overheated, then, even at the ordinary working pressure, there is great danger of an explosion. There is no occasion, under such circumstances, to search further for the cause of explosion, from the fact that the material, when everheated to a certain degree loses about five-sixths of its strength, and is, therefore, unable to resist the internal pressure. When a belier becomes short of water, the first thing usually done is to put the feed pump in action; this certainly remedies the deficiency, but increases the danger, and may lead to the explosion of the boller.
