Gold closed in New York yesterday weak at 42.

Cotton was quoted a shade lower, with sales of 1100 bales, at 25 3/4.

In Liverpool, yesterday, cotton had declined a fraction; uplands 10d.

Solid grain coffins are the latest post-mortem vanity.

A bonnet built in New York for an actress represents a ship in full sail.

Gen. Longstreet has denied the correctness of the conversation attributed to him by the New York Tribune's special reporter.

The great tars of Chicago have refused to enroll negroes. They favor "fair," but not "black and tan."

A gentleman who applied at the central telegraph office in Paris to have a message sent to Dayton, Ohio, was considerably annoyed to be asked, "Where is Ohio? Who's the King of Ohio?"

The Paris papers mention that Adeline Patis, now Marquise de Caux, has just paid thirty-five thousand francs, or ten thousand dollars currency, for a lot on the Boulevard Armand which she built herself a house.

The restaurant proprietors of Paris recently convened a meeting to establish the uniform price of oysters for the winter season.

After much discussion about the rate on one franc ten centimes, it was finally fixed at two cents (gold) per dozen.

The company in Cincinnati which ran with the first steam fire engine crossed in the world is continually adding ornaments to its machine, which is now glittering with gold and silver. The smoke-stack alone is worth $3000 as old metal.

The firemen of Ohio have been holding a Convention at Columbus with the object of obtaining, through the Legislature, after five years' service in the fire Department, exemption from obligation to serve on juries, from working on the road, and from service in the military within the State.

The London Saturday Review is of the opinion that after all more misery is produced by little grievances, like missing buttons, tight boots, ill-fitting coats, unpolished brass, than by the larger and more innumerable ills, such as bereavement and monstrous ingratitude and failure in the world.

A man in Connecticut, whose name appeared by mistake as one of the Vice-Presidents at a Democratic meeting, and who published an indignant editorial, that he "had not descended so low in the scale of fallen humanity," was arrested the other night as drunk and disorderly, and slept in the lock-up.

A San Francisco bootmaker has invented the latest agency in the way of ladies' gaiters. The heels, about two inches in length, taper down from the foot until they are no thicker than a map-leaf, and then widen out again until a surer twenty-five cent piece, which is stored, off at the bottom of each, just covers it.

New York brokers are, the mass of them, young men from twenty-two to thirty-five, and every five years send an entirely new set. A correspondent gives some of the original names by which they are known. One is called the "Mountain Deer," because he makes such fearful leaps.

"Dale's Eagle," because he is a "high-flyer" for the government. There is a "Little Mouse" who does very petty work, and is hard to keep out of the cupboard. "Baldy" can be seen any day flourishing his long arms in the original manner introduced by himself to "change," "John of York" is a well-known broker. He was never known to refuse a commission, or permit any "margin" to be "thrown." "Erie must go up! It must go up! I will not let another turn for you."

Mrs. Elizabeth Cady Stanton says, in one of her "brilliant" editorials for the Revolution, that the women of Vineland, New Jersey, are determined to exercise their right of suffrage this fall, for they claim that the proceedings of the Legislature were illegal, when, without amending the constitution, they passed a law disfranchising all women and negroes. The constitution of New Jersey gave "all persons" a vote in the government of the State, but it was changed by an arbitrary act of the Legislature, and not by the voice of the whole people. The women of Vineland are determined, if their votes are refused, to test this matter in the courts. So, gentlemen, hasten to a speedy revision of your old charter, for remember, if this matter goes into the Supreme Court, Chief Justice Chase is pledged to see justice done for women.

The co-operative principle is to be applied in San Francisco by women in a new department of labor. Not long since, Mrs. Agnes B. Peterson, with a number of other respectable women from the Eastern States, arrived in San Francisco, and endeavored to obtain employment as printers, they having learned the trade thoroughly before going to California. They applied to the principal printing offices in San Francisco for an opportunity to earn their daily bread at the trade which they had learned in their native land, but were refused in every instance, even by offices which actually needed more co-operators. The proprietors of these offices made no objections to engaging them at the Typographical Union rates of payment, and the women did not propose to work for less than the Union rates for men; but the Union decided that female labor shall be rejected, threatening to quit any office in which it might be engaged. Hence proprietors were obliged to decline it, even in instances where they needed more help than they could obtain from the ranks of good male compositors. Being unable thus to obtain employment, these courageous women obtained the necessary capital to fit out a printing office, have rented a place, procured presses, type, &c., and are about to commence a woman's co-operative job printing establishment.

Among the other remarkable features of the recent earthquake in South America, is the destruction caused in many of the sources of fresh water supply by many of the sea-coast towns of Peru and Northern Chili. For many miles back from the ocean there are in that region no wells, springs or rivers of any importance, and most of the fresh water used by the inhabitants comes either from reservoirs filled during the few months of the rainy season, or from wells, the distillation of salt water, in some places, as for example, Iquique, this latter is the exclusive dependence of the people; and when the earthquake destroyed the distilling apparatus, it inflicted an injury even more serious than the loss of life and the overthrow of buildings. In Peru rain never falls on the greater part of the strip bordering the ocean; and at Santiago, in Chili, the number of hours of rain during the year amounts, on an average, to two hundred and fifteen, or about nine days. Travellers tell remarkable stories of their experience in these parched-up lands. Fresh water is treasured there like valuable merchandise, and is spring is worth as much as a gold mine. The distilled water, too, is far from supplying the place of that which is produced by natural processes. It is tasteless and unsatisfying, and produces various affections of the skin and bowels. In our own favored region we are not so thankful as we ought to be for the blessing of abundance of fresh water.

CHARLESTON.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, SEPTEMBER 23, 1863.

For President..... HONORABLE SEYMOUR.

For Vice-President..... FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

Over the River.

Without trusting too much to Hercules—accepting the old decree that they who would extricate their wagon from the mire must put their own shoulders to the wheel—we have still an unshaken confidence in the future prosperity of our State.

While the black stream of negro Radicalism separates our past from our future, our ruin from our success, our people may be tempted to be gloomy and despairing. There is an eloquence in their losses and their sufferings which mere words cannot master; and it is hard in the decline of life to learn to take things as they come, to strive the harder the more unremitting our duty, remaining constant in our belief that a brighter day must dawn, and that in our own will may be found the boat to ferry us over the river.

We are not yet so philosophical as to find in blessings promised to posterity a full compensation for all that we ourselves endure. There is no great comfort in living only for the profit of the sons of children now unborn. We want the "harvest home" to come while they who have seen the darkest hours of our national existence still live, that they who have been stained with the old wine of sorrow may be filled with the ripe vintage of rejoicing. And this may be, if our people are as firm in spirit as they are true in heart; if they trust themselves as they have trusted others; if they look around our State, and feel that there is in her broad bosom an unold wealth, and in her broad diadem, studied with island pearls, the symbol of natural maritime sovereignty.

The rich lands of the seacoast, and the fertile acres of the upper country, give assurance that our people shall not want for bread. Our great staples, cotton and rice, will again be the means of increasing our common wealth. The precious minerals and phosphate earths will give us power as a people, and cause our universal mother to render a hundred-fold return for the labor which we spend upon her. Each town of the interior will raise its head and stand again erect. The trade of the great West pouring through the State will give life and energy to trade, and the waters of our seaport—the great ocean mart of the Southeast—will be stirred unceasingly by the whirling wheels of commerce.

All that is required is a cheerful spirit, and confidence in ourselves. The belief that our State will be, and must be, great and wealthy will go far to make her all that we desire. Ours is a race that cannot be subdued; and if we have but firmness, patience and the will to work; before many years are past the dark river will be safely crossed, and South Carolina will be once more happy, thriving and free.

What it will Cost!

It has often been attempted to convince the freedmen, and those white Radicals who have some property to lose, that the General Assembly is legislating in the interest of party, and not for the good of the State at large; that it is, in fact, a vast office-making machine, which will turn out big offices with big pay as long as the party remains in power, and there is even one hungry Radical to cry out for food from the pockets of the people. What argument and explanation have failed to do, hard facts and figures may accomplish, and we therefore invite the attention of every decent Radical in South Carolina, to a statement of what will be the annual expenses of the District of Georgetown, under Radical administration, as compared with the expenses under the old system.

Under the old State government the district had a sheriff and tax collector; a clerk of court; a commissioner in equity; an ordinary, or judge of probate; a coroner; and four magistrates; as well as commissioners of roads, public buildings, of the poor and of public securities. Some of these officers received no pay whatever, others were paid out of the contingent fund of the State, and it is within bounds to say that the amount of fees and salaries for the district did not exceed $1000.

Under the Radical State government the fees of the sheriff and the cost of feeding prisoners fall upon the district, and there are now forty-five prisoners, who cost eighteen dollars a day. All the new holders of old offices will receive a salary, and new offices have been created, viz.: Prosecuting attorney, auditor, assessor and deputy State constable, which would make the yearly cost as follows: Twenty-three prisoners costing $9 a day, $2325 Sheriff's costs and fees..... 1500 Clerk of court—costs and fees..... 1000 Presenting attorney..... 250 Costs of convicted persons unable to pay..... 500 and paid by the district..... 500 Three tax commissioners at $600..... 1800 Auditor..... 1300 Tax collector..... 1500 Assessor..... 750 Commissioner of schools..... 1000 Deputy constable..... 750

That is to say, the cost will be thirteen thousand six hundred and thirty-five dollars under Radical rule, against less than one thousand dollars under Southern rule, without calculating the salaries, costs and fees of the magistrates and constables who may hereafter be appointed.

In addition to this taxation there will be a public building tax, a road and bridge tax and a tax for the poor. The public buildings and roads and bridges will require at least $2500, and the cost of supplying the actual wants of the poor will not be less than $5000, making a grand total taxation of twenty-one thousand one hundred and thirty-five dollars.

Then there will be the State taxes on the people of the district; and, taking into account the circumstance that there is a large pauper negro population from which taxes cannot be collected, the total payment required for the State and district taxes will not be less than forty thousand dollars a year, against a total taxation of thirteen thousand dollars last year for all purposes.

It is now well to see what will be the effect of this taxation. In Georgetown district there are about five hundred white males and twenty-eight hundred black males of twenty-one years and over. The blacks have no property and can only be reached by a poll tax. But the new constitution declares that no poll tax shall be levied except for educational purposes, which cuts off all revenue from that source. The result is that the white adults must pay the whole taxation, which for each one of them will amount to the annual sum of EIGHTY DOLLARS.

The unusual action of Congress with reference to adjournment is explained as follows: Should the October elections go Democratic, a session will then be held, and some as yet undefined legislation perfected, with a view of changing the result in November. Should the elections prove a Republican success, no business will be transacted, but a further recess will be taken until a day in November following the Presidential election. This is for the purpose of meeting every contingency that may arise, and turning the current whenever it can be possibly turned by Congressional legislation.
