-There will probably be ten Quakers in the next British House of Commons. Among them are the two Brights, Charles Gilpin, Edward Backhouse and William Slater.

Among the patents recently granted in France is one for a strong coffer, the peculiarity of which seems to be that if fraudulently opened it will kindle a Bengal light, brilliant enough to assemble a multitude, who will firmly believe that a house is on fire.

-At an agricultural dinner in England a gentleman arose to reply to the toast of "The Ladies," when from the ladies' gallery came a voice, "Sit down, sir!" He did so, with a thump, and a lady arose and responded to the torst, fanning herself meantime, and giving the gorged agriculturists a lecture on the impropriety of eating by themselves while the ladies whom they toasted looked on hungry. -The Saturday Review says: "The English man, as he passes through the weary wastes of American travelling, is struck principally by the absence of two things. There is no poverty and there is no joviality. Of all countries that the traveller visits, the United States is the most gloomy. Every one in the cars has an oppressed and gloomy sppearance." And so on, through a long eseay.

-Recent dispatches from the East Indies stato that earthquake shocks were felt in the Punjaub on August 20th. The catastrophe in South America occurred, it will be recollected, from August 18th to 18th; it is therefore probable that the two phenomena were caused by the same convulsion of nature. As a continuous route of shocks from one point to another on the surface of the earth cannot be traced, it is conjectured that the force of the internal commotion may have been communicated through the diameter of the earth, Eucador and India being opposite. These facts, however, may support the theory of internal fires beneath the crust of the earth.

-In the recent South American earthquake, the only person lost belonging to the Wateree was the boat-keeper of the gig. He was a Scotchman named Tait, who, in this last lifescene, displayed the native heroism of his race. The frail craft and its sole occupant were carried on the crest of the first tidal wave, and thrown back to shore again with the returning foam of the liquid mountain. Tait saw at once, and seemed to be fully aware of his impending doom. Seizing the gig's ensign in his right hand, he stood for a moment erect in the stern sheet of the boat, and waived to his comrades a last adieu. All on board the ship looked on this tragic scene with breathless interest. He continued to wave the American flag in the midst of this elemental horror, but the second recoil of the angry waters dashed the gig to pieces, and swallowed the hardy sailor, so that he was seen no more.

- The Wisconsin papers tell terrible tales of the effects of the collapse of the hop bubble, the termination of the hop fever and the fall in the price of hops. For some years past the hop crop has been so abundant, prices so high, and the returns so large that hop-growers were completely intatuated, and great numbers of otherwise sensible men were converted into hop monomaniaes, who thought of nothing, talked of nothing, and cared for nothing but hops. Every other interest gave way to hops. The tumble in the price of hops has produced widespread disaster. The farmers in the hop regions, since the magic reed upon which they leaned has broken, are without money and without bread; in short, they are left with nothing but mortgaged farms, needy families and ruined credit. The Wisconsip papers say that the result of the present state of affire will be the uprooting of probably one-half the hop yards in the State, and predict that the recovery from so disastrous a crash will be

-M'lle Luzgel, the pretty French actress, was recently married to Prince Tolstoi, one o the wealthiest young noblemen of St. Petersburg. The Prince "popped the question" in a somewhat unusual manner. There was a fair at the M. Petersburg French Theatre, for the becefit of the French hospital. Mile Luzgel presided over one of the stands at the fair, and Prince Tolstoi banteringly asked her how much she would take for a kise. She glanced at him rather sternly, and replied that she would not kiss any man but her bethrothed. The Prince passed on, but returned to M'ile Luzgel's stand a quarter of an hour afterward, and said rather thoughtfully to the young actress, "Will you permit me to ask you another question, Mademoiselle?" "With pleasure, sir." "Have you a bethrothed?" She eyed him a moment in surprise, and said then, with a blush and "No, sir." "Would you like to have smile, "No, sir." "Would you like to have one?" "That depends on circumstances," said she laughing. "Well, then, would you take me?" So saying, he handed her his card. She was greatly astonished, and finally stammered out she would give him an answer next day. On the following morning he called at her house, the ro, ly was in the affirmative, and today Mademoiselle Luzgel is a Princess and a happy wife. -A duel took place on the 27th, on Dutch territory, between M. Rochefort, of the Lanterne, and M. Ernest Baroche, son of the Minister. M. Erpest Baroche is Master of Requests in the Council of State, and an officer of the Legion of Honor. The cause of the duel was an article in the Lanterne in reference to the recent demand of a schoolmaster named

THE DAILY NEWS. permission. He will be obliged, for controverborne by a son publicly accused of swindling, and of malversations in the affair. Mires caused it to be affixed with ignominy to the walls of Versailles. He then proceeds to taunt M. Baroche for having arrested all the world except his son. This appears to have led to a challenge from M. Ernest Baroche, the Minister's son, and the gentleman alluded to. The duel was with swords. It took place on Dutch territory, and lasted no less than thirteen minutes. M. Ernest Baroche received three wounds, one on the thigh, another on the breast, and a third in the side. M. Henri Rochefort was slightly wounded on the right arm. The witnesses of the latter were Messrs. Charles and Francois Victor Hugo, the two sons of the illustrious poet; those of M. Ernest Baroche were M. Adolph Belot and an officer of whose name we are ignorant. Dr. Laussa was present at the duel, and attended to the wounded gentlemen. -The New York Evening Mail says: "One of the curiosities of Printing House Square is the huge engine which runs the Mail press as well as many others. This is owned by a firm in Spruce-street, between William and Nassau, and occupies the basement of the building. There is a large one hundred and fifty horsepower engine which runs during the day, and seventy-five horse-power which relieves it at night. From this shatting and belting distribute the power in every direction. One shaft runs across Frankfort-street, supplying the Mai and other offices. Another crosses Williamstreet and runs the six cylinder presses which print the three hundred thousand copies of the Ledger in its beautiful press room. Another shaft crosses Spruce-street, runs through and across Beekman, and even supplies presses in Ann-street. Altogether this engine supplies over one hundred and twenty-five presses, each being estimated and charged so much for horse power, according to the estimates. It runs three-quarters of a mile of main shafting, besides a mile or more of connecting shafts, and as much belting. One of these belts (an India rubber one), one hundred and twenty feet long, connects a fifth-story press-room on Nassaustreet with the main shafting on Spruce, across the intervening yards, and another leather one on Beekman-street, one hundred and forty feet long, perfectly perpendicular, connects the sub cellar and attic. This engine prints all McLauchlin's toy books, runs the immense establishment of Bradstreet and J. N. Oliver, besides many other job printers, a hocpskirt manufactory, and several binderies, and prints nearly fifty papers, besides magazines and books innumerable; among them the Mail, the Independent, the Dispatch, the Leader, Star, Examiner and Chronicle, Observer, Courier, Clipper, Wilkes' Spirit, Turf, Field and Farm, Police Gazette, La Crosse Democrat, Ledger, New York Weekly, Literary Album, Sunday Times, New York Democrat, Commonwealth, Scottish Americau, Freeman's Journal, Tablet, Emerald, Irish People, Irish American, etc.

CHARLESTON.

Truly, a power in the world.

THURSDAY MORNING, OCTOBER 15, 1868.

For President HORATIO SEYMOUR. For Vice-President FRANCIS P. BLAIR.

Nil Desperandum.

The result of the elections in Indiana, Pennsylvania and Ohio is a grave disappointment; but neither Radical victories now, nor the possible election of GRANT in November, should cause our people to abandon their struggle with difficulty and misfortune. They have hitherto maintained a firm front under doubts and troubles without number; and they must not now fold their arms and cry that all is lost.

For this State, as for all the Southern States, there is a higher law than that popular creed which makes riches and prosperity depend on the election of Democrat or Radical. The election of Mr. SEYMOUR would not, in a moment, lift the country out of the depths, close the wounds of war, and change the fields made desolate into smiling towns and villages. Upon our own energy and constancy would still depend the measure of our success. A Democratic triumph would give assurance of a helping band and moral aid to our people; but it would be fraught with danger if it lessened our fortitude and relaxed our industry. The election of GRANT, on the other hand, could not destroy us. It would make our task harder and more painful; but all the gods in the Radical Pantheon cannot keep us in the dust, if we firmly resolve to be stout of heart and never to falter in the determination to work out the redemption of this stricken Southern land. Even though our negro government should seem to be permanently fastened upon us, we know the white people of the South; we know the resources of our State; we know the weakness and dependence of the freedman; and knowing these things, we feel that if we are true to ourselves, and do not fritter away our time in talk, it is simply impossible that the black man should continue to hold the reins of government, or that this State and this city should be long prevented from growing rich in all the elements of substantial and lasting prosperity. This may seem unreasoning faith; but it is faith with works, and the root of that faith is confidence in the white race, and in the unflagging persistency of our people. Had the Democrats carried the October elections, no one would have doubted the coming of better days. As it is, there is still room for manly confidence. This is our country, the country in which we all must live, and with which our fate is linked for weal or woe. The enduring record of an unsullied past, and an intelligent appreciation of the means to a prosperous future, alike forbid our people to despair. We can yet rule the State as it was ruled of old-by intelligence and worth. We can yet make the country overflow with prosperity and rich in the elements of greatness. We can yet retrieve our every disaster, and make bright our darkened page with the gilding of hope and promise. This we can do, let November bring what it may. Shall it not be done?

Bulwer.

MISCELLANEOUS PROSE WORKS. By Edward Bulwer, Lord Lytton. In two volumes. Now York: Harper & Brothers. 1868. Charles-ton: Holmes' Book House.

Bulwer impresses the reader with the idea that his fame has been won by hard work. In his first literary production of any merit-a poem in 1825, on sculpturehe symbolized his literary life. His s'udio groups through which the incessant chisel wrought its way, and when the perfect forms appeared, few had such finish as not to betray here and there the mechanical secret of their origin and the design for which they were put together. There is more mind than heart in his genius-more constructiveness than passion. His characters feel cold to the touch, although oftentimes the pose is so admirable, the situation so dramatic and the figure so airy, so grand or se beautiful, as wholly to disarm criticism. You willingly forget that Pelham is a earicature of Bulwer in society, and Rienzi a political friend of Bulwer in Parliament; that Glanville is a civilized "Cor-"sair." and Paul Clifford an artistic and philosophic "Jack Sheppard;" that Zanoni is a fable of Love's Sacrifice, and that the terrible scene of Clifford's condemnation by his own father is borrowed from Mrs. INCHDALD; for consummate art conquers your convictions, and persuades you that the ideal lives and the beautiful copy is a great original. The remark specially applies to the earlier period of his literary career, to which most of the essays now before us belong. His later novels, although characterized by the melodramatic, are, nevertheless, marvellous triumphs both of skill and of genius. And they differ in an important particular from their predecessors, for their moral is high and pure. Bulwer's prose essays have been comparatively ignored, on account of the transcendent interest attaching to his novels. Yet they are well worthy of attention, as among the best of their class. During his editorial charge of the "New Monthly Mag-"nzine," the author served an apprenticeship to this style. In undertaking "to show "that a gentleman could be an editor," he succeeded in taking a high rank among British essayists; for the sketches written at this time and subsequently are among the most finished and thoughtful of his productions. They are full of movement, brilliant with fancy and wit, and, in their allegories, fu'l of truth and imagination. The philosophic wisdom which ever tinges his versatile pen, here becomes the more impressive because undisturbed in its tranquil flow by the necessities of the narrative. The short stories and the essays, whether airy or grave, all have a certain family resemblance, and lead a train of sweet and serious meditation.

The first volume contains, for the most part, the essays of the author's mature life; the second the lighter sketches of his youth, if, indeed, we can apply that name to a series which contains the admirable "Coneversations with an Ambitious Student in "Ill Health;" the third, yet to appear, wi'l contain the "Caxtoniana," a cellection of his more matured opinions. The essays on GOLDSMITH, Sir THOMAS BROWNE and SCHIL-LER are charming biographies, full of spirit and character. In the second volume, we have been particularly pleased with "Lake 'Leman and its Associations," and with the "Influence of Love on Literature." The introduction, which, we are sorry to say, is badly written, reminds one of the dingy portal of one of the Greek houses at Constantinople-it admits into a scene of beauty and magnificence.
