[FOR THE NEWS.] Good-by.

I cannot bull
My restless thoughts. Like troubled streams,
They flow and ever moan. There seems
A tone of sadness in the whispering trees—
A murmured echo on the twilight breeze,
Saying, "Good-by."

The parting time
Is past. He gave me words of peace,
A pastor's blessing, and the farewell kiss.
Although his kine words brought me some relief,
Yet still, my heart was all too full of grief
To say, "Good-by."

I know not why
Such tender sweetness, yet such power
Of crushing sadness, fling their shower
Of thorns and roses from the little word
That oftenert with a weary sigh is heard—
The word, "Good-by."

A double spell
It bears—to soothe the dreary heart
With the sweet wish implied—to start
Arresh the bubbling fountains of the heart's keen pain, ase the parted may not meet again To speak "Good-by."

Not always thus

These bitter partings. Sorrow's night
Must fade before the dawning light
That scatters beams upon a heavenly shore.
There shall earth's tired wanderer never more Repeat, "Good-by."

THE HANGING OF MRS. SURRATT.

Her Innocence of Complicity in the Assassination of President Lincoln Clearly Established-Reasons for Pardoning the Dry Tortugas Prisoners.

The New York World publishes a lengthy letter from Baltimore, giving some curious and interesting details, going to show, not only Mrs. Surratt's guiltlessness of any participation in the plot for the murder of the late President Lincoln, but the impossibility of her having had any knowledge of it. The writer also adduces strong argument to show that Dr. Mudd, Arnold, O'Laughlin, Spangler and John H. Surratt had no foreknowledge of the assassination, and that of course neither of these parties had anything whatever to do with it. He argues, and if the statements made prove true it would seem effectually, that John Wilkes Booth, the acknowledged head and front of the conspiracy, only made up his mind to the rash deed a few hours before it was perpetrated. On the Good Friday during the evening of which the President was killed, Booth rose at an unusually late hour, and breakfasted with a young lady guest at the National Hotel. He then walked leisurely to the house of Mrs. Surratt, the writer surmises for the purpose of making inquiry in reference to John H. Surratt, who was then in Elmira, New York, and who was a warm, particular friend. Here he met and conversed a short time with Mrs. Surratt, who, as Booth left, took her unfortunate ride with Weichman to Surrattsville, for the purpose of collecting certain monies due her, whereby she could cancel claims on her estate held by the executors of the estate of the late Charles B. Calvert. Booth, up to this time, it is assumed, had not determined on the assassination, and this was the last he saw of Mrs. Surratt on earth. After leaving the house of Mrs. Surratt the writer in the World thus describes the movements of Booth:

Thence he took the easy, careless, graceful stride which was one of the characteristics of his street appearance, up Pennsylvania avenue, and thence to Ford's Theatre, to get his letters. At the theatre, Harry Ford, brother of the proprietor, thought to have a joke with Booth, being on the best of terms with him, and said:

and said:

"John, the President is going to be here tonight with General Grant. They've got General Lee here as a prisoner, and he's coming too. We're going to put him in the opposite

"John, the President is going to be here tonight with General Grant. They've got General Lee here as a prisoner, and he's coming too. We're going to put him in the opposite box."

At the same moment Harry Ford handed Booth a letter enclosed in a long envelope, addressed to him. Booth broke the seal, remarking, in a careless sort of tone, "O, no; they haven't got Lee a prisoner; they certainly wouldn't bring him to Washington."

It was only an hour or two before a messenger had come from the White House to the theatre to say that the President and General Grant, with Mrs. Luncoln and Mrs. Grant, would visit the theatre that evening. At that hour, when the messenger came with this announcement, Booth must have been about getting out of bed or at breakfast; and as she was then bowling along in a buggy towards Surrattsville, and as she was not to, and did not return to Washington till nearly or after dusk, the case endeavored to be made out, against her on the trial—that she went to Surrattsville on Booth's errand, with foreknowledge of his purpose to undertake the assassination at the ballots were carried to the Mavor's office and left there in open boxes.

Wherefore the undersigned contest the said election, and ask that the returns, together with the ballots, shall be examined, and the case investigated by your board, and that a time and place be appointed by your board, and that a time and place be appointed by your for the proofe.

Alderman Wall requested the Mayor to read the law on the subject, which he said that the matter was one of grave importance, and one that required a careful consideration—a matter which affected every one in the committee of the proofe. her on the trial—that she went to Surrattsville on Booth's errand, with foreknowledge of his purpose to undertake the assassination at the theatre that evening—collapses in the first place. Booth had no possible means of knowing, nor is it supposed that he knew, anything about the purpose of Mr. Lincoln to attend the evening performance, until he visited the theatre at this time and heard the news from Here Forel's torage.

The subject of the protest was freely discussed by Aldermen Geddings, Wall, McKinlay, Moore and others. After which Alderman Geddings introduced the following preamble

atre at this time and heard the news from Harry Ford's tongue.

The writer then goes on to give the movements of Booth after leaving the theatre. He first went to the Kirkwood House, walking much faster than was his usual custom. Here, it is supposed, he met Aztgrott, who, with Payne and Herold, are known to have been in the previous plot to abduct the President and carry him to Richmond. After this visit to the Kirkwook House Booth was not seen on foot during the afternoon. It was there the plan was probably arranged: Atzerott was to take the life of Vice-President Johnson, Payne was to slaughter Secretary Saward, and Booth undertook to attend to both the President and General Grant.

Booth's whereabouts, between his leaving the Kirkwood House and his second appearance at Ford's Theatre at night, were never the Kirkwood House and his second appearance at Ford's Theatre at night, were never conjectured. One clue alone has been afforded to them. Payne stated in prison before his execution; that they met again that some doubt arose, and that it was not until eight o'clook that night the final resolve was made. Herold was appointed to conduct Booth along the route beyond Washington. The visit to Dr. Mudd was made solely at the suggestion of Herold, to have Booth's broken ankle set and tied with splints. The Doctor's house was a considerable distance from the direct line of a considerable distance from the direct line of escape. Booth and Hereld arrived late at night, when Booth explained to the Doctor that night, when Booth explained to the Doctor that he was hurt by being thrown from his horse. He remained, after the doctor had attended to his ankle, to have a crutch made, and then left. When he had finished with his patient, Dr. Mudd quitted the room and did not see Booth near enough to speak with him again, but observed him at a distance leaving the place with Heroid.

Arnold, now under sentence for life, was, at the time of the sensarination, and had been for Arnold, now under sentence for life, was, at the time of the assassination, and had been for weeks, smployedin a sutler's store at Fortress Monroe. There is no trace of any correspondence and no evidence of an interview between Arnold and Booth during the month of April. O'Laughlin (now dead), whom a barber, at the trial of J. H. Surratt, swore Booth had called "Mac," was employed in Baltimore, but was in Washington on business the day of the assassination. His movements were perfectly accounted for by some officers of the navy. Spangler was at and about the theatre. His admiration for Mr. Lincoln, and his innocence of complicity or knowledge in Booth's plan, are firmly believed in by everybody who knew him. He was not even arrested for several days.

The World, in referring to the letter of its correspondent, says:

correspondent, says:

President Johnson, not less certainly than every other fair-minded citizen, must be deeply interested in seeing that the one reparation which can be afforded to persons so infinitely wronged is promptly made. He cannot have forgotten that, on the morning of the fatal 7th of July, 1865, a young girl, Anna Surratt by name, came a suppliant to the White House and threw herself prone upon the steps beneath its portice and vainly besought permission to enter and plead to him for her mother's life. He cannot forget how his enemies, who did not hesitate in the passion of that time to bruit the foolhardy but, terrible insinuation that he, the Vice-President, had abetted the assassin who made the President's chair his seat, also openly charged that his refusal of mercy to Mrs. Surratt and these prisoners was inspired by personal fear. Nor can he forget that his best friends regretted at the time, and have never esceed the corrow, that his pearaning the definitions.

What is there now to prevent President Johnson from instituting an inquiry into a matter so notorious as this, vindicating this woman's memory for her children's and the nation's sake, and giving these men their rights as citizens? For his own sake, as well, we call upon him to do justice, and release these prisoners.

The Mayor stated that he held in his hand a paper which bore the endorsement, "Protest of Election of Mayor and Aldermen." He said to Council, that it bears upon its face, in the signatures attached to it, an impress of respectability which commends it to the careful consideration of Council. It involves a matter of great importance to the citizens of Charleston, and therefore demands a calm deliberation at their hands. He then proceeded to read the

"THE BEST OF THEIR CLASS." QUACKENBOS' ARITHMETICS: Practical, $1; Flementary, 60 cents; Primary 40 cents; Mental (nearly ready), 50 cents.

This Series is meeting with a most gratifying reception from teachers everywhere, and is exactly what is needed for mental discipline, as well as for a practical preparation for the business of life. It is clear, thorough, comprehensive, logically arranged, well eraded, is supplied with a great variety of examples, and teaches the methods actually used by business mee.

amples, and teaches the methods actually used by business mou.

Special attention is asked to the Practical. Its rules and analyses are free from unnecessary words; its methods are the shortest possible. Above all, it is adapted to the present state of things. During the last five years, specie payments have been suspended, prices have doubled, the tavif has been altered, a national tax levied, &c. Our book recognizes all these changes, AND IT IS THE ONLY ONE THAT DOES—the only Arthimetic that describes the different classes of United States Securities, and shows how to find the comparative results of investments in them. Used in the Public Schools of New York, Brookly a, Albany, Jersey City, &c., and giving the highest satisfaction. No progressive teacher can afford to use any other.

QUACKENBOS' GRAMMARS: An English Grammar, $1; First Book in Grammar,

Clear, well condensed, and consistent throughout; brief in its rules and definitions; happy in its illus-trations; practical in its application of principles; in-ductive and philosophical in its arrangement; origi-nal in its views; bold in its reforms; every way adapted to the schoolroom; interesting to the pupil labor-saving to the teacher; full and jugenious in its explanations of peoplexing constructions; makes the learning of Grammar easy; makes the teaching of Grammar A POSITITE PLEASURE. Such is the verdict pronounced on Quackenbos' Grammar by our best educators. Hosts of recommendations published in

No person need be troubled with Rate Mice, Bod Buze or Roaches, for Mr. Isaacsen's destructive remedy is within the reach of all, prepared only by himself, from rare and valuable compounds, its cheapness is as wonderful as its efficacy—hundreds of testimonials have been received from all parts of the United States as to its value add satisfactory operative power, from which, for want of space, we simply select the following:
