-On Saturday, evening a band of armed negroes, nearly one hundred in number, entered the Town of Darien, Ga., with two white men in custody, whom they commanded the sheriff of the county to put in irons and confine in the county jail. The officer told them he could not do this; there must be some process of law before these men could be deprived of their liberty. The negroes said that this made no difference; some of their party had been shot at some time previously; these two men had been arrested on suspicion, and if the sheriff did not place them in irons they would take them out and shoot them on the spot. Seeing that he had no other course to pursue, the officer obeyed, and incarcorated the men in order

The Morning News says: "The negroes were also reported to be killing all the cattle and hogs, and collecting the provisions in the country in readiness to convey to their strongholds and fastnesses, where they hope to defy the officers of the law. On Saturday morning an Ogeochee negro came into town, and stated to a prominent gentleman that he had been sent by the insurgents to this city to make the proposition | for a number of years, the humblest reward that ten or twelve colored men be sent out | for the results of his intelligence and inthere by the citizens to treat with them, dustry; but with the change in the labor and arrange the difficulty in a manner satisfactory to all parties. CHARLESTON.

WEDNESDAY MORNING, JANUARY 6, 1869.

A Southern Pacific Railroad.

It is hard to believe that the Pacific Railread,-at one moment denounced as a gigantic swindle, and the next lauded as the great work which is to fill the measure of national prosperity,-was deliberately constructed so far north as to be of comparatively little value to the South, or that sectional feeling and hatred of the Southern people dictated its unfavorable situation. And yet, if reliance may be placed upon the statements of a trustworthy Radical journal-the Cincinnati Commercial-we can hardly come to any other conclusion. The Commercial says that a Pacific Railroad, to be central, must run in latitude 36° 30'. But the Pacific Railroad begins at Omaha in latitude 41° 20', crosses Nebraska, Wyoming, Dakotah and Utah north of latitude 42°, trends to the southwest in Nevada, and diverges from its meridian about two hundred miles, in order to reach San Francisco. The Commercial then riddles the whole scheme in this wise:

For four-fifths of its entire length it is far north of the meridian of San Francisco. It must be subject to violent snow storms for several months every year. It traverses a desert across western Nebraska, across Wyoming, across Dakota, across Utah, and thence passes into the Great Basin, one of the most bashada alkaliance travel to globe a place. passes into the Great Basin, one of the most absolute alkaline wastes on the globe—a plateau where all the streams sink into the barren sands, where the wretched Indians live on ren sands, where the wretched Indians live on grass seed, and decent drinking water is unknown. Crossing Nevada, the railroad threads the Sierra range, winding through Donner Lake Pass, where wet, soggy snow falls nine er ten feet in a single storm; and where the writer last August stood beside the track making snow balls from huge banks that never wholly melt away. All who have personally examined the route will say that the perils of winter travel over the Central Pacific Railroad of California through Donner Pass, are so palof California through Donner Pass, are so pal-pably great that no man will incur them who pably great that no man will incur them who is not foolhardy. The Nebraska end of the road has icy terrors to contend with that are only has icy terrors to contend with that are only less repulsive than those pertaining to travel across the Sierra during the average winter. The C.llifornia end is building snow sheds and the Nebraska end snow walls. Noither snow shed nor snow wall can stand before the mountain avalanches that sweep down giant trees and huge masses of stone as if they were ragots and pebbles.

These being facts, it is not strange that the Commercial declares that the Congress of the United States has spent fifty million dellars and given away twenty-one million acres of land to build a Pacific Railroad that is inconvenient for all the country south of the Lake cities, which is indirect in reaching San Francisco, and unquestionably unsafe for nearly half the year.

Radical though it be in its politics, the Commercial does not hesitate to intimate that the Southern States will be called upon te aid in righting these wrongs. "Three-"fourths of the Stat. " are said to lie south of the worthless road. And, says the Commercial, "whatever may have "been the status of the Southern States "during the war, it will hardly be de-"nied that they are in the nation now. "The Northern States that adjoin them are "not disposed to view the South as a region permanently given over to poverty, po-"litical intolerance, and hateful social ex-"clusiveness. Time is mending these evils, "and the chain of central States are no "lenger willing to be censidered as bound-"ing the republic on the south. That, happily, is once more the function of the Gulf of Mexico."

These are cheering words; and we con tinue our quotation :

We have not heard that grass is growing in the streets of Philadelphia, Baltimore, Pitts-burg, Cincinnati, Louisville, St. Louis, New Orleans, Memphis, Nashville, Charleston, Richmond, Savannah and Mobile; but we are sure these cities are not content to be sneered at by Chicago because they must pour into that petted entrepot in order to journey over a government enterprise to reach the metropolis on the Pacific that is in about the same latitude as Norfolk, Va. As well might the government in former days here built a railroad beginning at Buffalo, to accommodate the national travel to Norfolk, as to have planted the great route to San Francisco in the latitude of the lakes. The country at large would have been as conveniently served in one instance as it will be in the other, and a good deal securer against the death of passengers by freezing or starvation.

Our first Pacific Railway is a mortifying geographical blunder. To sanction another still further north would be a crime against common sense, decent fairness, and human life itself. To refuse to construct a central and competing Pacific Railroad that can be run all competing Pacific Railroad that can be run all the year round, and along a meridian where snow seldom falls, and never to great depth, will be to make as damaging a sectional error as was ever committed under the old reign of the slaveholders. What we advocate is a road to which all the States, North and South, may equally stretch out their iron arms, and so keep the cadence step of national progress un-broken. We feel no jealousy of the Northwest. What we want is justice and impartiality to all sections of our reknitted republic; and under those conditions may the best States and the

those countries may the best states and the best cities win.

The only Pacific Railroad project that has the merit of being central to the whole country, is the continuation of the Union Pacific Railway, eastern division, which is now completed to the western line of Kansas, and has surgered the central to Childwain side. veyed the rest of its route to California via New Mexico and Arizona. That road must go through for many and most conclusive reasons.

The Rise in Cotion.

It must be a source of satisfaction to al who desire a speedy restoration of prosperity to these Southern States, to notice the commanding position which most of her staples occupy in price. The enormous crops which her prolific soil sent forth in former days enabled manufacturers and consumers to manage values very much to suit themselves, giving the Southern planter, system a decrease in the production occurred which has, to a great degree, placed the regulation of prices in the hands of the

THE DAILY NEWS. Of course everything was quiet when he reach- ducts on a better basis than has heretofore ed there, and the negroes were peaceable, been the case. This is particularly true of been the case. This is particularly true of quiet citizens. They offered to surrender to the great staple cotton, the yield of which has been reduced to an amount about onehalf of what it was just before the war, which heavy loss to the world has undoubtedly, for the present, or until the loss can he somewhat regained, given the American planter a power over its price which he this morning. General Sibley is in command never before possessed. The experience of the present year has tended strongly to strengthen this view; but buyers, with few exceptions, generally expected low rates in December and January, and large operations were made at the commencement of Ogeechee on Saturday to advise the negroes to the fall, for cotton to be delivered, at figures which inflict a heavy loss on those who sold. At Liverpool and Manchester the movements of trade have been such as to depress the commodity; but notwithstanding these unfavorable symptoms elsewhere, prices here continue to go up steadily, and in this market yesterday the article advanced a half to one cent per pound; and strict middling cotton was sold at 27 cents, while sellers at New York were offering about the same quality at 271 cents. This shows the Charleston market to be about the best in the country for sellers of cotton.

THERE WAS a ludicrous, though self-evident, blunder, in the article on the real estate tax, published in THE NEWS of yesterday. The sentence, "Indeed, it seems 'somewhat absurd that the committee "should only estimate the tax on gross "sales to produce seventy thousand dollars, which would be the tax upon a total sales "of $1,400,000," should read * * "which "would be the tax upon a total sales of "$14,000,000."

and Means of the amount to be realized from the tax on gross sales and sales of cotton, is as follows:

THE ROUND TABLE comes to us this week with a vignette of Justice on the title page, and we find that the arrangement of the reading matter has been altered so that there are but two, instead of three, columns on the inside pages. The chess department is begun, and promises to be of interest to the knights of the chequer. We do not think that the Round Table has gained by the change which has been made in its external appearance; but we know that it retains the fire, the wit, and the manly independence which, together with its acknowledged ability, have left it without a rival in the ranks of our periodical
