The room Every article of furniture was fraught with recollections of the past. Succeeding Presidents had carefully preserved everything intact. Especially was this the case with President Johnson, who regarded the old furniture as sacred, and would allow nothing removed or changed. But the room was not fine enough for President Grant, and he has had it entirely remodelled and refurnished. The "improvements" are thus described by the Court Journal "The ceiling is frescoed in the modern style of renaissance and Italian combined, the scroll representing 'Industry,' 'Commerce,' 'Agriculture,' and 'Peace,' are neatly executed and attract much attention. The new marble mantel has been placed in the apartment, elabo rately carved and highly polished. The carpet is of Wilton, crimson underground, and Italian arabesque border. The furniture is of French tents to be published at these rates and American walnut combined, and upholstered in French tapestry rep. The President's private desk is a very handsome piece so arranged that by dropping the apron, which forms the desk, the doors inclosing the upper portion open, and are also closed upon putting up and locking the apron. The table for the Cabinet, in the centre of the floor, is of French and American walnut, with compartments for each member of the Cabinet and a large arm-chair for each place. The curtains are of French tapestry rep, with heavy walnut cornices and gold decorations; the national escutcheon and laurel wreath, in bas relief, being carved in the centre. A large mirror, in walnut and gold frame, carved similar to the window cornices, occupies a place over the mantel. A sofa and a number of small chairs fill up the spaces around the room which is now a very comfortable and pleasant looking office." President Grant, in showing the room to a visitor, remarked, in a self-satis fied manner, that it was "extremely nobby. So is the Presidential billiard-room. A ten-pin alley and faro-bank are talked of.

The Turning Tide.

The glad tidings of Democratic successes in Ohio and Pennsylvania, which we chronicle this morning, are none the less weldared to expect. Accustomed to the glowing predictions of party organs, and chary of attaching importance to the wailing of Radical leaders, we had not hoped for anything more than a slight indication that the people of both East and West were making ready to thrust aside the profligacy and roguery; which for nearly a decade have shaped the destinies of the nation. The elections of Tuesday last were so embarrassed by local questions, and the personal popularity of particular candidates, that we could have met, without heavy disappointment, a sweeping Republican victory. As it is, our most sanguine anticipations are fully realized. The yeomanry of Ohio and the brawny artisans of Pennsylvania, the capitalist and the laborer, the farmer and the mill-owner, have declared at the ballotbox their utter repudiation of the fraud and trickery, the extravagance and nepotism, of the dominant political party. The mighty tones with which the electric wires are doubting few who constantly despair of their country, their city and their State.

In Pennsylvania, which at the Presiden tial election, last year, gave a majority of 28,898 for Grant and Colfax, the contest has been hot and close. The Radicals have used, without stint, the advantages which the new registration law gives them, and by this means alone defrauded the Democracy ticket. Office-holders in posse and in esse, secure the defeat of Mr. Packer. All the party machinery was in active operation: Cabinet officers took the stump and exhorted the people to "do their duty;" the horse, foot and dragoons of bribery and intimidation did good service in overawing the weak and restraining the strong. And the end is that, according to their own statements, the Radicals elect their candidate for Governor by only 4000 majority. Eleven months ago the Radical majority was 28,898. In the Keystone State have gained nearly 25, . 000 votes. This is good enough. The Radicals call it a "victory." Let us have a score more such "victories," and there is an end to the Radical party. In Ohio the result of the election for Govwas physically unable to take as prominent a part in the canvass as his friends desired. but his brilliant record and the sympathy of the people with his political principles stood him in great stead, and have elevated him, we trust, to the Gubernatorial chair. As to which, at the Presidential election last year, gave Grant and Colfax 41,428 majority. The election of a Democratic Legislature secures the rejection of the Fifteenth amendment as far as Ohio is concerned

Well may we feel that the tide is turning.

Well may we rejoice with the Democrats of the East and West. In Pennsylvania we have cut down the Radical majority of 28,898 in 1868 to a Radical majority of 4000 in majority of 41,428, elected a Democratic Legislature, and elected, in all probability the Democratic candidate for Governor And the Democrats of the North will grow stronger every day. They have on their side the feelings and instincts of the people. fifteen times greater than that of ordinary gas. The men who are ground down by taxation: the men whom protective tariffs force to pay necessaries of life; the men who love law long for an economical and honest government; the men who demand that there shall be the same currency for the bondholder as for the ploughholder-all these look to the National Democracy for succor and relief. chant the dirge of Democracy in America, will passionately regret their selfish precipi-

Wholesale Robbery

The cultivation of cotton, whatever the gross value of the crop, is, so far as individuals are concerned, a somewhat hazardous pursuit. About the fleecy staple there is no certainty, save the certainty of expense. Money is poured out month after month for provisions and for hire of laborers for stock and implements, for seed, and for fertilizers; and when the plant has run the gauntlet of drought and freshet, of gnawing caterpillar and thieving negro, the producer may be met by prices so low as to leave no hope of profit. For the ordinary risks of seasons and markets, the planter is, of course, prepared; but the nightly thefts of gangs of idle negroes are more than he can endure, and threaten to break his already bended back. In the towns and cities it may seem a small matter to lose, here and there, by stealing, a few pounds of seed cotton. The planters know to their sorrow that what was once mere filching is now wholesale plunder. From every county there comes the same complaint; the evil is assuming every day more alarming propor-Who can read without anxiety and alarm the statement of our Williamsburg correspondent, that in the neighborhood of Kingstree a cotton field of seven acres, and a cotton field of four acres, were picked out clean in a single night. Our correspondent informs us that an organized body of thirty or forty negroes is engaged in this nefarious work, and with or without concert of action, the same marauding is going on in every part of the State. At a time when the people are required to pay out of the proceeds of one crop, out of the labors of one year, more than two million of dollars for State taxes alone-in the face of a shor vield of corn and a small crop of cottonstart is given to the plundering propensities of light-fingered gentry, who are encouraged by the agrarian speeches of their leaders to help themselves to all that the white mar calls his own. The hints and promises of the Radicals are producing their natural effect, and the hope is that thefts and taxation will force the property-holders to allow their lands to be sold, when they may be bought in by a State official for division among the freedmen. This appears to be the whole plan of the Radical political campaign-a plan worthy of the party.

Toward reducing taxation at present we can do nothing. There may be found some way of checking the theft of cotton. In several counties the farmers and merchants have agreed that no seed cotton shall be bought after dark. The Town of Kingstree forbids all dealing in produce during the night. This is something; but we fear, not over-much. As long as there are corner stores, where the bagful of produce may be converted in a trice into whiskey or greenbacks, the pillaging will not grow less. The only way to put it down is by the passage of a stringent law imposing severe penalties upon persons who buy stolen produce. Such a law our Radical Legislature may refuse to pass; but there can be no harm in making the attempt. It is well to give the General Assembly an opportunity of showing whether it is the friend of the cotton thief and the foe of every planter and merchant and honest laborer in the State. Until the Legislature meets, the planters may, by combi nation and agreement, at least make it more difficult to steal without imminent danger o detection. A thorough discussion of the whole subject in the different counties will show what is the feeling of the people, and it will probably be thought advisable to request the South Carolina Agricultural and Mechanical Society to take up the question and prepare a bill which shall be both severe ann just.
