AMUSEMENTS.

Academy of Music. At length the glorious sun of the drama has dawned again over Charleston. We have a company of players among us. Nething comparable to last night's performance has been seen here since before the war. Boucicault's domestic drama of Hunted Down was given last evening, at the Academy of Music, by Miss Laura Keene and her company. The plot is sensational, but by no means infected with Boucicaultian extravagance. Its incidents, though of course exceptional, are within the bounds of reasonable probability, and do not task faith to the sacrifice of judgment. John Leigh, an artist, has a charming wife. They live as happily as love and truth would make us all live. Unhappily, Mary, the wife, was once the married victim of a wretched debauchce and gamester, who had married her for her small forune and instantly deserted her. He had been arrested for forgery, had escaped from the police, and been drowned leaping from a boat. Mary had, to avoid the disgrace of so infamous a connection, resumed her maiden name; in that maiden name she had been married to John Leigh. Ten years afterward, this wretch, who had not been drowned, but had been saved by accomplices, and had subsequently been a convict and galerien in the French bagnes at Toulon, turns up. By the agency of a busybody old aunt, half Paul Pry, half Mrs. Candor, and the remainder female absurdity, poor Mary's painful secret has been brought home to her. She has never told her husband, because he has expressly refused to hear any painful histories of the past, and has kissed away all sorrow, and put up the tears of memory in the great reservoir of his love. But murder will out. The miserable reprobate tracks her, and finally hunts her down, and demands money from her as the price of his silence and of his permission to her to remain in the comfort that is expended on other comparatively triding of her children's love. The honor of her position and the silent deception she is thus compelled to practice on her generous husband's trust and faith, so prey on her fine organism that she falls into brain fever, from which she recovers but slowly, and is unable to meet John without intense mental excitement, which he innocently attributes to her debilitated condition and morbid ensibility. The old aunt, however, with the keenness of a detective and the pertinacity of a feret, will not let the secret rest. certain Clara has been a model for John Leigh in his artistic pursuits. This Clara turns out to be the mistress of the resuscitated gambler. That estimable individual having despised his poor wife at the outset as a raw girl, had fallen in love with the woman, mature in matronly beauty, and perfected in the genia atmosphere of domestic happiness and screne affection. He despises the money, but craves after the woman, and persecutes her with letters, to which she eventually is compelled to make one reply, which bears a somewhat ambiguous construction, intimating her intention to leave her home and abandon all, rather than submit to his base annoyance. This letter falls into the hands of Clara, and the meddlesome aunt coming in at the moment, an exposure is inevitable, and the gambler having gone down to see Mary, the other two wemen start in pursuit of him and to denounce her iniquity. They take with them the particular letter, and a packet of old letters from Mary, which they had found in his desk. Armed with these impregnable proofs they confront the husband, but he will listen to no allegations against his adored wife. Proofs are as nothing Paith and love are superior to all outer evidence He, however, consents to speak to his wife, in or der not to convince himself of that which is his talks to her, puts the case hypothetically, makes it his own, reversing their position, and her declaration of mighty and boundless trust in him, his love and his honor, are so responsive to his own sentiments that he discards the monstrous proposition engendered by that it should be so. Having poured out her soul before him, she is on the point of telling her secret when her eye falls on the figure of her first husband in the garden, and in an instant she swoons away in John Leigh's arms. John runs for a doctor, the gambler rustes in, throws himself at her feet, protests his love and is caught on cises. his knees by the Mrs. Marplot, who taunts Mary > nation to abandon the scene of her married felicity forever. She writes a letter, encloses her wedding ring bids adjeu to her children, and is in the act of quitting the premises, when the gambler appears and declares she leaves only to become his wife, for that he loves her. Herrifled at this new access of misery, she shricks for aid to John Leigh, at last that Clara had been all the time the gambler's lawful wife, and that the second marriage was, therefore, illegal, and peace is restor, with her iniquity and drives her into a determi

ed to the troubled home. The acting throughout is perfect. Miss Laura Keene expresses every phase of emotion, of deep feeling, high toned honor, maternal affection, and wifely love and devotion, with a refinement, delicacy and simplicity that absolutely preclude ordinary commendation. Praise simply cannot do the performance justice. It is so exquisitely simple—so exactly natural—that it is nature we see, not art. Her bursts of indignant feeling are electric, and carry the house by sterm. But the judicious observer is won by the careful and minute attention to human feeling and human ex-pression within the limits of modern reserve and self-control. Her fainting fits and slow recovery are among the very finest pantomimic bits we have ever witnessed. Mr. Mordaunt was scarcely less admirable than Miss Keene, in his easy self-possession, in his perfect simplicity, never rising beyond the ordinary speech and gesticulation of an English gentleman. The immense weight of his confidence in his wife is only shown by a deeper, more compressed depth of tone, and in his wrath he is as one who will dare all things, but says little. We would fain, in the interest of good acting, have analyzed the performance in extenso, but are reluctantly obliged to condense our remarks.

"Tne American Cousin," one of Miss Keene's amons pieces, comes on to-night, and after that she will play Naomi Tighe, in "School," which we are not a little curious to see, as it is difficult to realize how the mature woman, mistress of pathos and deep-seated sentiment, will adapt her self to the joyous, buoyant, exuberant school-girl. The rest of the company must excuse our brief encomium. We can only say that the setting is worthy of the gems. Opera-The Caroline Richings Troupe. It is of the essence of human happiness not to be content with the present. We must ever reach out after the future. Now that we are in full enjoyment of the dramatic banquet spread before us by Laura Keene, one of the most finished artists and elegant women of the day, we are still bound to remind our readers that other delicacies are in store for them. We have learned with gratification the expected arrival of the Caroline Richings Opera Troupe, which will reach our city some time in April.

Mrs. Richings Bernard herself is not only thorough musician and fine vocalist, but an admirable dramatist. The same remark may with justice be applied to Henri Drayton, the baritone, whose superb voice and profound musical science are only equalled by his vivid and impressive elo cution and action. Mr. Drayton has some special claims on our consideration; for we have been informed that his partiality to the "Lost Cause" was made a bar to his professional advancement in some Northern cities. We had thought at least that art was eclectic, knowing neither place nor person. We can only mourn the perverted taste, and hope that here at least it will prove no bar to popular affection. Miss Emma Howson is a pure English soprano. Hy. Peake a basso profundo, with immense dra matic power and inexhaustible versatility. Mrs. maid. Mrs. Wi.,merding, H. L. Suydam, G. A. Brookhouse Bowler is one of the sweetest contraltos, and a charming actress. Her "Flower song" in Faust is a flower of melody. Mr. Bernard and Cantain Facroleth, Purser Baldwin, W. McKee, Mr. Bowler are good tenors, and Warren White an able and effective comic basso and chorus leader. The company is in fine working order going all together like a well drilled regiment, and their performance of light English opera is one of the greatest and most refining entertainments known in these days of bouffe and bur-

CHARLESTON COLLEGE.

President Middleton, &c. Hibernian Hall was crowded last evening to its utmost capacity to witness the annual commencement exercises of the College of Charleston. It was difficult to find even standing room for the immense audience which gathered to testify their honor for the institution and the interest in its graduates. After prayer by the Rev. C. S. Vedder, the salutatory address to the public was delivered with admirable emphasis and effect by Mr. Thomas Wright Bacot, who appealed to all the different classes of his auditors to listen with favor and kindly criticism to the efforts of the youthful orators who were to follow him-an invitation to which they were not slow to respond. The address, which was marked by much humor and pathos, was frequently interrupted with applause. The president stated that Mr. John B. Haskell, to whose lot it had fallen to deliver the Latin salutatories to the trustees and faculty, had been excused on account of ill-health, in spite of which obstacle, existing throughout the whole of his college course, he had gained all of the highest places in his class. Orations on "Napoleon I," by Mr. Daniel C. Webb; on "The Ruins of Time," by Mr. D. Huger Bacot, and on "Truth," by Mr. Sam uel S. Buist, followed, along with a pleasant and suggestive essay on "Old Books," by Mr. George Smith Bolmes. Mr. James G. Porter then delly ered a striking and thoughtful plea for the classics, gracefully written, and spoken with much spirit. The valedictory addresses of Mr. Hender son closed the exercises on the part of the gradu ates, after which the president, Hon. N. R. Middleton, conferred the diplomas and degrees as follows : D. S. Henderson, first honor; T. W. Ba cot and J. B. Haskell, second honor; D. C. Webb first appointment; D. H. Bacot, second appoint ment; G. S. Holmes, third appointment; T. S Buist, fourth appointment; J. G. Porter, fifth appointment. The following named gentlemen received the title of A. B.: L. D. B. McCrady, W. H. Wagener, T. R. Tighe, T. H. Strohecker. The title of M. A. was conferred upon Mr. John

A. Moroso, of the Courier, and that of D. D. upon Revs. W. C. Dana and F. A. Mood. In conferring the degrees, the president made the usual Latin address, concluding in English as follows:

And now, gentlemen, it only remains to bid you farewell. We have done what in us lay to prepare you for life and its responsibilities, looking upon it not as a finality, but as given to you in the interest of a fat higher and nobler existence. You are well aware that we have only furnished you with the elements of knowledge, and we now transfer you to another teacher, wiser and better, more just, more faithful, more patient, more benign. You remember that when Socrates first appeared as a teacher in Athens, Antisthenes dismissed his disciples, saying to them, "I have found an instructor, go, each of Socrates first appeared as a teacher in Athens, Antisthenes dismissed his disciples, saying to them, "I have found an instructor, go, each of you, and seek one for yourself." We say the same to you; there is but one infallible instructor, go, each of you, and sit at his feet, and learn there the significance of life and the dignisy of duty, so that, strenthened and enriched by that high discipline, you may construct your life upon so perfect a model that it will present nothing to mar the beauty or to disappoint the promise of this eventful hour. You have been drawn to duty by noble aspirations; do not suffer them to subside into the satisfactions of a narrow circle of ephemeral success; do not allow the dark shaddow of worldliness to obscure your mental vision, or to circumscribe your infinite horizon, do not shrink from the burden of responsible existence. The difficulties which lie in your way are not intended to crush, but only to test and to correct you, and you owe it to yourselves, you owe it to the might which is pledged to sustain you, not to falter in the inevitable encounter.

Can you doubt a faithful instinct, which has taught you'te presage.
That your lengings shall be answered in the fulness of the age;
That the springs of your existence, which are gathering at the root Shall course along its branches yet, and burgeon into fruit. That the glories of your visions are but sketches faintly drawn

Of revealings which await you when the day at length shall dawn. We are glad to note that the deep interest which is felt in the college by the community seems fully justified by the very gratifying character and elevated tone of the commencement exer-

The Cause of Cuba

TO THE EDITOR OF THE NEWS. On last Friday night the Cuban Junta re solved to have a public meeting on the night of April the 4th, to be held in the most conspicuous place in this city. The cause of our struggling is the cause of the world—the independence of Cuba. We do not doubt to find in this city thousands of sympathizers who will be willing to aid us no only to get our independence, but to assist thousands and thousands of unfortunate women and children who had to leave their huts and run into the country imploring clemency, from the barbarities of the Spaniards. We do not doubt to find in the civilized City of Charleston many good-hearted people, who will do all that is in their power; for we not only defend the independence of our country, but we also sustain the grand doctrine of Monroe, and the great American principles of Liberty.

We hereby invite those who sympathize with our cause, and any who desire to speak in our public meeting, to direct us a letter to "E. T.," P. O., Charleston, or see the president of our Junta, No. 118 East Bay And you, Mr. Editor, will please help us in this affair.

Thanking you for your good wishes and kindness, we are respectfully yours, THE OFFICERS AND MEMBERS OF CUBAN JUNTA.

PRATT'S "ASTRAL" OIL

Dils.

Unlike many other Illuminating Oils, is perfectly pure and free from all adulterations or mixtures of any kind. It emits no offensive smell while burning, gives a soft and brilliant ight, and can be used with the same assurance of safety as gas. Chemists pronounce it the best and safeet Illuminating Oil ever offered to the public; and Insurance Companies endorse and urge upon consumers the use of the "Astral" Oil in preference to any other. It is now burned by thousands of families, and in no instance has any accident occurred from its use; a lamp illied with it, if upset and broken, will not explode. To prevent adulteration, the "Astral" Oil is packed only in the Guaranty Patent Cans, of 1 gallon and 5 gallons each, and each can is sealed in a manner that cannot be counterfelted. Every FACTORS AND COMMISSION MERCHANTS, and 5 gallons each, and each can is sealed in a manner that cannot be counterfeited. Every package with uncut seal we warrant.
