TUESDAY, JUNE 21, 1870.

UNION REFORM NOMINATIONS.

For Governor, HOY. R. B. CARPENTER, OF CHARLESTON. For Lieutenant-Governor, GENERAL M. C. BUTLER, OF EDGEFIELD.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Gold closed in New York yesterday at 123 1/2. Cotton closed steady, unchanged, with sales of 1200 bales. In Liverpool, yesterday, cotton tended upward; uplands 10 1/4; Orleans 10 1/4; sales 10,000 bales.

Cincinnati is described during the Seager-fest, as a "gigantic beer garden, with a few houses interspersed here and there." The Legislature of Oregon, which has a Democratic majority, meets in September to elect a successor to Senator Williams, Republican.

General Capron, the Commissioner of Agriculture, has imported from India a small quantity of the seed of the jute plant, with a view of introducing its culture into the extreme section of the Union, south of the frost line. It is being distributed to planters in Texas and Florida, who will give it a fair trial.

The last step in the movement of consolidating all the anti-Western Union telegraph lines in the country, took place at Boston last week, in the election of the new board of directors of the Franklin Company; and soon we shall have a pretty formidable rival to the Western Union in the Atlantic and Pacific Company and its wires. They will embrace the Franklin wires from Boston to Washington, the old Atlantic and Pacific lines from New York to all the leading Western cities, and the Missouri River, and the lines, respectively, of the Union Pacific and the Central Pacific Railroads; all of which are now up and in operation, and give reliable communication across the continent and between all the principal cities of the great business belt of the nation.

The Augusta Constitutionalist is making itself very unnecessarily miserable over what it thinks will be the result of the Reform movement, already so triumphant in Washington and elsewhere, and so splendidly inaugurated last week in our own State. Now, it does seem to us that our Augusta contemporary might be a great deal better employed than in venting its superfluous spleen and smartness against a movement of its neighbors, which it doesn't comprehend, and with which, certainly, it has no manner of concern. South Carolina, we admit, is just now in bad case enough, but we submit that Georgia, even with the immense advantage of the daily counsel of her Constitutionalists, has hardly won that success in the cure of her own political ills, which entitles her to prescribe with authority, right and left, for those of her sister States of the South. We would mildly respond to the Georgia oracle who predicts that South Carolina is going to the bad—"Physician, heal thyself!"

"Will Dickens last?" is the question asked editorially by the New York Evening Post, and the fear is expressed that the present world-wide love and admiration for the great novelist will narrow down eventually until his readers and admirers will comprise only a small and select circle. Pudding, the writer says, was more successful than Dickens, and to-day few read him. James's novels were read by millions only a few years ago, and now his readers are few and far between. Fashionable change in novels, it is stated, and the fear is expressed that Dickens will fall a victim to a change in literary fashion. We have small fear of this. The fashions in human nature never change. There never was a more thorough and genial apostle of human nature in the literary world than Charles Dickens, and on this fact we found the strong hope that "Dickens will last."

Royal Babies.

The blessings of royal babydom, like the feelings of a corrupt Radical when a Reformer is at his heels, may be more easily imagined than described. From the moment when pealing bells throughout the kingdom give joyful tidings of the happy nuptials of Kingly Darby and Queenly Joan, the thoughts of every loyal subject fondly turn to the expected Royal Baby. The weal or woe of the superb parents is a matter of small consequence. The object of the glittering pageant is a Royal Baby, and when that limp specimen of royal humanity does come to town, guns are fired, hourly bulletins reveal the state of the infantine poll and loyal lieges become royal oblivious of all the cares of life. King Darby and Queen Joan may now go marching home just as fast as they please. The kingdom is safe, though the heir be more interested at the moment in golden tops and emerald marbles than treaties of peace, declarations of war or the state of the national exchequer.

Every squeal of the Royal Baby echoes in the maternal heart of every patriotic subject. Teething is met by public prayer. A recovery from whooping cough is heralded by rolling salutes of pestiferous cannon. The measles become the deadly foe of millions until the perilous crisis is past, and as for small-pox—a pest upon the thought. And the Royal Baby grows in wisdom and loveliness—in the public mind. The loyal press chant the praises of its precocious intelligence and robust health. There are two Royal Babies—the one, the baby of the loyal public, bright, capable and strong; the other, the true Baby of the Royal Household, flabby, weak and stupid. But it answers every purpose. The people believe that the Baby is all that they wish it to be. What mother sees faults in her toddling first-born? And the mother of the first Royal Baby is millions of loyal people.

A man is envied who is born with a silver spoon in his mouth, but what can express the glory of the Baby all whose spoons are gold, whose candy is rolled in gilded paper, whose dolls are garbed in satins fine, whose every toy is a jewel of price, whose tears are dried with gold brocade, whose infantine accents reach the outer world through the mouths of silver trumpets? This is, in very truth, the glory and the splendor of Royal Babydom—as the public mind believes. There may be within the palace walls a hollow-eyed, weazened child, hugging a dilapidated wooden monstrosity to its heaving breast, and loving mud-pies better than paté de foie gras, or choicest bon-bons of Paris; but this, whatever the truth, is not the Royal Baby whom the people think they know, and actually do love.

Time rolls on with Royal Babies as with the child of chimney-sweep or dustman, and by the time that the Baby is out of its long and into its shorts the minister of its royal father and mother are on the "qui vive" for a royal marriage. Perched on the top of the social tree, does the Baby marry whom it pleases? Not a bit of it. The peasant may marry for love and fan-y, but the Royal Baby must wed for reasons of state, to prop a falling throne, to confirm a waiting friend, or soften a bitter foe. This is a part of the price that must be paid for the golden spoons of Royal Babydom.

The universe is hunted over and very soon a list is prepared of eligible candidates for the hand of the royal prodigy. Again is the public on the alert, eager for another wedding and more Royal Babies. A husband or a wife is bargained for just as a string of fish is bought in the market. And then the bells ring, and more bulletins are published, and the whole programme goes over again. But where is the use of it? And where will it end? His Majesty, Infelix XXIII, may have ten royal babies who are cheerfully provided for by the loyal taxpayers; but when these ten are multiplied by ten, and these again by ten, who is to provide the pensions and palace, the purple and the line, the jewels and the golden sceptres? A people is not like the magic horse, whose back grows longer as the burdens were heaped upon it. There must be a limit to its endurance; and who can tell whether the breaking of the popular back will be heralded by a silent protest or a war of revolution? The Royal Baby must beware in time. Unless some monarchical Malthus seize the reins and curb the multiplication and increase, the wealth of a whole nation will be insufficient to support its parasitic Babies. A squall is brewing, but, all the same, the Emperor of Russia and the King of Prussia meet at Ems, to arrange a marriage for two more Royal Babies.

WOMAN'S FRIENDSHIP. A story of domestic life. By Grace Agillar. New York: D. Appleton & Co. 1870.

HOME SCENES AND HEART STUDIES. By the same author.

These two volumes form a part of the new and neat, although inexpensive, edition of the works of Grace Agillar, published by D. Appleton & Co. The fertile mind and graceful fancy of Miss Agillar, no less than the high purpose she has always in view, have made her works great favorites even with readers of mature years.
