An informal declaration of our neutrality in the war between France and North Germany has been sent abroad in the form of in-structions to American foreign mediaters and consuls; Rosd; arms and munitions of war are to be sold to either party to the conflict, stment of troops will be permitted in this country of 177 delivered to the Emperor, on Saturday last, they expressed their satisfaction with the war against Prussis on many grounds among others of the ground that by it Germany will soon be treat from the domination which has oppressed her. It appears, however, by our latest advices, that the Germans fall to see the contest in that precise light.

-The three most prominent French officers and corps commanders in the present war sixty amen of age. The three leading comrs in the Prusslan service, beside the Crown Prince-Von Moltke, Manteuffel and n are all over sixty, and the firstnamed is seventy years old. The King of Prussia is seventy-three, and the Empercr of France sixty-two years of age. It is likely hat some younger men will be heard of, on both sides, before the war is over.

-It is apprehended by shippers in New York that, as France is so greatly superior to Prussia in naval force Napoleon will stretch his authority as far as possible in regard to the second and third articles of the "Paris Declaration, which provides that the "neutral flag covers enemy's goods, with the exception of contrattend of war," and that "neutral goods not contraband are not liable to capture under an enemy's flag." It is believed that the French Government will try to render these provisions of little effect by including everything possible under the term contraband; and had a surer ground upon which to stand, there are apprehensions of trouble on this account. .. streets, .tnuo

-The latest report about the Spanish crown is that it will now be offered to Prince Alionso, the second son of the King of Portugal, who is but five years of age. The Spanlards have minted through all the nations of Europe for a King. They tried to get a Portuguese, in the person of Don Luis, who is an old exmonarch; they tried to get an Italian, in the person of Victor Emanders' young son, the Duke of Genoa; they tried to get a Spaniard, in the person of Separtego, who is an octogenariand Thome of them desired a French rbon, Montpensier; some of them a Spanish Bouston; the Prince of Asturias; some of them an English Prince, cons of the sons of to be coveted, a power that cannot be de-Queen Victoria? war along with him. A New York letter, of Friday, says Opinions differ as to the war and its length. Bankers here are wholly at sea upon the sub-lect. Some of our papers here predicted that war in Europe would bring us to specie payments quicker than anything else, and this idea is held by many simply because they read it in the papers. These persons, therefore, are gotten. At last the entente cordiale was handshy of gold; they could not be induced to touch it with a forty-foot pole, and hence the support | nations closer together by the famous comof such is withdrawn from the market. On the other hand, there are those who believe that gold is the cheapest thing in the market, and they load up by the million. One operator has half a million up on margins alone! The circular of Jay Cooke & Co., this afternoon, speaking of the light rise in gold early in the day, says it was a surprise to many of the operators who looked for a sharp advance to at least 18a20. But the trouble they had to contend with was the covering of the entire short interest, and all being long they were anxious to realize at the first advance and thus keep the market down." -A New York letter, of Monday, says

"Capitalists uecline to emberk in enterprises that run into the future, and holders of almost every description of foreign merchandise are putting up prices, in some instances to a very extravagant figure. German and French goods of every description are from 10 to 20 per cent. higher than they were a fortnight age, and the chances are that the stopping place has not yet been reached. Flour has taken a further jump up. 25a50c. per bbl., wheat 5a7c., and corn and oats from la2c. per bushel. The excitement in the stock, gold and produce markets, all day, has been tremendous. At one time no price appeared too extravagant to bid for gold, and parties who purchased at the comparatively low figures current on Saturday, must have made fortunes, if they were astute enough to get rid of their load when the premium reached its maximum-222. The heaviest operators, as usual, for some time past, have been the German houses."

The Reform Mass Meeting.

The Mass Meeting of the citizens of Charleston, held on Wednesday night, for the purpose of ratifying the nominations of the Reform Convention for Governor and Lieutenant-Governor, had a deep significance, proving, beyond peradventure, the pluck, manly firmness, and ripe ability of the Hon. R. B. Carpenter, as well as the earnest interest felt by all classes in the important work in which the honest men of the State are engaged. The weather was sombre and threatening, and, before the time arrived for opening the meeting, there was more than one shower of Princess Alexandra of Denmark. The Prinrain. Trooping clouds draped the sky in a cess Helena married Prince Christian of darkness only broken by the lightning's fitful gleam. The wind blustered through the streets, playing rudely with the flags and draperies which decorated the speaker's stand. But a solid phalanx of the good people of Charleston was undaunted and undismayed. There were many who dared not breast the storm, but thousands of lustier spirits gathered in the plazzas of the hotel, and in the open street, and stood there. calm and steadfast, from the beginning to the end of the meeting. There was a fire in their hearts which no mere rain could quench.

When the speakers took their places upon the stand, the rain was falling fast, and by England overwhelmingly on the side of Gerthe time that Mr. O'Connor had finished his well-timed and well-delivered speech, it came down in torrents. This was the condition of affairs when Judge Carpenter began his fiery denunciation of the iniquities of the Scott Ring. Harder and harder fell the rain, but the standard-bearer of Reform did not blench or seek a shelter. The drenching rain lasted the whole evening, but Judge Carpenter, bareheaded and scornhis hearers with his own fortitude, and diffusing around him the glow of his own enthusiasm.

The meeting was loud and hearty in its applause. No pungent phrase, biting word, or clenching argument fell flat and dead. A long roll of cheering accompanied the whole speech, and it may be fairly asserted that there never was in Charleston a public meet ing in the open air which, encountering so many difficulties, was so splendidly success-

The good work is well begun. Our people have shown that they are in earnest. They have shown, and their candidate has shown, that their right of free speech they will maintain whatever the cost. And Judge Carpenter, while winning a host of converts, has entrenched himself more firmly than ever in the respect and regard of bis friends.

The Position of England.

The telegraphic news which reaches the United States from both France and Germany may fail to furnish the means for estimating, with even approximate correctness, the immediate cause of the declaration of war against Prussia, which took the world by surprise, and arrayed against each other the mightlest military nations of Europe. It was apparent, as soon as the first clouds cleared away, that France would give no other reason for her hasty action than her old grudge against Prussia, and the socalled affront offered her ambassador by King William. This affront, if affront it really were, added to a determination to obtain, by hook or by crook, the possession of the German Rhenish provinces, was the sole excuse for a war which will cost thousands of precious lives and millions upon millions of treasure. This view is confirmed by the bold speech delivered by M. Thiers, in the Corps Legislatif. He boldly told the country that France owed the war to a blunder. and warned his colleagues that the public opinion of Europe would turn against them. Until this speech-not one word of which was allowed to reach England by telegraphwas made public, it was thought that France and that the plea of necessity, at least, would not be wanting. But the foreign telegrams contain nothing which places in a favorable light the conduct of the government of the Emperor Napoleon. They tell of national enthusiasm, of subscriptions of money, of the popular eagerness for war.

All this is do obtless true to the letter, but it is equally true that the whole current of public opinion in England, as in the United States, is against France and in favor of Prussia. This is no longer a Prussian quar thought it better to give him up than take a in England. Since the elevation of Napoleon to the throne of France, it has been the steady aim of English statesmen to stand well with France. Now and then the British Cabinet have been disposed to go farther in the way of currying favor than the national will would allow; Palmerston made a blunder of this kind which is not forsomely established. Mr. Cobden drew the mercial treaty. English travellers in France were relieved from the annoyance of carrying passports. Every year legions of excursionary Englishmen poked their heads into every hole and corner in France. A trip to Paris from London was an affair of ten hours or less. Surely nothing could cause a rupture of friendly relations, and set the leopards of Albion against the eagles of France! In the Russian war, moreover, the troops of Napoleon and of Victoria fought in common cause. There lingers still in the English breast a memory of the misty morning when the Grenadiers and Coldstreams, marching under the balcony of Buckingham Palace, received the silent adieux o their Queen; nor has every English heart forgotten the tearful messages of the Queen to her wearied soldiers who lay in the trenches at Sebastopol; nor is it forgotter that the French and English soldiers drank from the same canteen, bore together the brunt of battle, and, side by side, subdued the Muscovite. To regard England and France as fast friends in peace and in war, became, to a great extent, the habit of thought in both nations. France had little to fear while England was with her. England, with France as an ally, could hold her colonies fast, and stem the tide of Russian ag gression. And yet, at this moment, France s condemned by all England; is condemned without stint and in no measured terms. It may well be imagined that this state of things is a shock to the sensibilities of those who believed that, under all circumstances, the Eastern question would hold France and England together, and forbid even an unfriendly neutrality. After all, if we go down to the root of the matter, there are many more ties between England and Germany than between England and France. Queen Victoria is about as much German as English. The Prince Consort was a German. The Princess Royal married the Crown Prince of Prussia, the heir-apparent to the throne. The Princes Alice married Prince Louis of Hesse-Darmstadt. The Prince of Wales married the Schleswig-Holstein. It is true that in the war between Prussia and Denmark the English people were heartily in favor of Denmark, and it is equally true that an irate Briton occasionally grumbles at having to pay the wedding bills of so many German Princes. Nor can it be doubted that the English and Irish Catholics now, as ever, lean towards France. But against one alliance with France the English mind sets the glorious memories of two long centuries of a close-knit friendship with the peoples of Germany. And the binding tie of religion, of manner of thought, and, to a certain degree, of common descent, must put many, when the quarrel is national, not local, and when, as now, Germany is un doubtedly in the right. The position, then, of England would appear to be this: As a matter of interest, as well as policy, she will remain neutral as long as possible; but, if her neutrality must be broken, the weight of her influence, the force of her immense resources, and the valor of her troops, will be thrown on the side of Germany rather than on the side of France. Already, certain members of the English House of Commons are consulting as to the propriety of holding a great meeting to express sympathy with Prussia, and the workingmen of London propose holding a meeting for the same object. These, it is true, are only straws; but if the New York Tribune's London correspondent is correct in his surmises, that the troops recently called home from the colonies have been concentrated in England, in anticipation of the "present war," a few weeks may bring about a bloody change in the Continental relations of Great Britain. For Congress.
