were divorced, but John would follow Cora around entreating to be reinstated. She didn't fike this, and plainly indicated it by shooting him. No -An effort is being made to displace the long established hoop skirt. A gored haircloth skirt stiffened with hair cords running horizontally around the garment, and enlarged at the bottom with several haircloth flounces, is expected to take its place.

-Immense chignons and heavy padded false chatclaine braids, looking like a burden upon the head of the wearer, are rapidly disappearing. Our mest fashionable belies now braid or plait their own natural tresses in two long braids, which are looped to the back part of the head.

-There is something, after all, a little disreput able in parody and burlesque. There is a small nursery song beginning, "Mary had a little lamb," it has been repeated by mothers to their children, and repeated back in lisping accents by the chiland repeated back in isping accents by the children themselves. In many a mind it is associated with tender memories of those who were too early lost. But the parody-writers have got hold of the ditty, and are twisting and turning it into all manner of laughable and ridiculous shapes.

Mr. Nast has come to their assistance with a lot of caricatures at which, in spite of himself, one cannot helpdaughing; and the ruin of the pretty little song is complete. This is one of the results of the rage for the comic which marks the present time, and which has declared a laughing war against all that is serious. We do not com plain; we only wonder.

-The New York correspondent of the Philadel-phia Ledger grites on Honday as follows: "It is to the credit of the German Population here, and especially that numerous and unquential class who do business down town, that they have abstained from all formal and public exultation over the sorrender of Paris, though under the circumstances, perhaps, they might be pardoned something of the kind. The North German steamers at Hebotten have their nags fixing in honor of the event, it is true, but apart from that there is nothing in the way of outward jubilation to attract attention. On the contrary, when it was proposed on 'Change, this morning, that a steamship should be immediately dispatched to Havre, with a cargo of provisions for the inhabitants of Paris, it is said that more than one German merchant came forward and offered to contribute No class of the community have been quicker to mark this praiseworthy disposition than our adopted citizens of French extraction, and as might be supposed, the effect is a mutual feeling of kindly regard, in place of the suppressed ho tinty that existed between the two na ionalities

It will cost flity dollars more to deliver them in perfect condition in Savannah. Mr. Powers's charges are higher, bu he has so much to do that last year he would take no orders for busis. He uses, besides, only clay brought from the State of Alabania. He says it is the best in the world, smoother for moulding, and of a color that in working does not injure the eyes. On entering Powers's studio, one is, of course, neeply interested in his wonderful productions, but not less so in the man himself, whose whole manner and appearance indicate genius. He is extremely polite to strangers, and explains with a peculiar charm the circumstances and design of par icular works. Attached to some six or eight busis in his studio, of better known that immense stores of goods persons from different States of the North, are cards with 'the names and prices, and a statement that they have been ordered and never paid for. Mr. Powers says he has been forced to take this means of protecting himself against those who would gratify their vanity by giving an order for a bust and never paving for it." -The telegraph meagrely announces the burn ing of the coolie ship Uncawah, in the Chi. a seas, in October last. Late foreign papers give the terrible details. The Uncawah sailed October 13 from Mecao for Caliao, with five hundred and thirty-seven coolies on board. When eight days out, they rose and refusing to go below after exercise on deck, a severe battle ensued between them and the crew, in which the carpenter and steward were killed and several sallors wounded At last the Chinese were driven below, when they set fire to the ship, and the crew taking fright got out a boat, and the captain was obliged to jump overboard and swim after them. They pul'ed five days, tilf they remoned the Great Natunas Island, whence they were soon taken off. The British ship Juanpore, on the evening of the ing about 36,000 bales. On coffee and sugar mutiny, approached the burning ship and picked up a boat manned by twent, ove Chinese and a Greek sailor, wno told the terrible story. Next day she cruised near the burning ship, picked up from pieces of wreck, &c., 112 of the survivors, which she brought to Anjer. The remainder of the coolles doubtless perished in the destruction they caused. -New York journalism has just won another of its peculiar triumphs. . leading newspaper of the metrop'is, feeling that the Pope is not already sorely enough tried, sent one of its most servile lackeys to interview his Holicess, and spread his views before one hundred and seventy-five million Catholic believers. The fellow entered on his work with zeal, and is so well satisfied with his achievement that he signs his name in full to the The first column is devoted to the usual nuff of the paper's enterprise, and the reporter's peculiar fitness for the mission, the second to the journey to and fifth to Monsignore Nardi, and the sixth to the Pope himself. The fellow, who had been crawling on his knees before every ecclesiastic that he had met, "genuficated on one knee" be fore the Pontiff and kissed his hand. Tals oscuatory salute failed to unseal the Pope's lips, for he entrusted the reporter with nothing but the most stale and ordinary facts. The Holy Father shows in the conversation an active sense that he was being bored, but when he declined to say anything about the "modus vivenat" betwee himself and the King, and the prospects of his own departure from Rome, the impression left on the reporter was not that he had been snubbed as an impudent intruder, but something much more satisfactory to himself.

John Bull in a Bad Way.

England is in a sad strait, if Blackwood's the memory of living man, says a writer in month 50 cents; 3 months $1; 6 months $1 76; 12 that periodical, the British army was never so discontented or disjointed as it is now. Regimental officers complain-and they have just right to do so-that they are held up in Parliament, in private society, and through the press as habitually neglectful of their duty. They do nothing, it is said, that they can possibly help, and the little that they are compelled to do they do gradgingly. If this were true to the letter, which it is not, could any one be surprised? It seems to be the great object of those in authority to sever as much as possible all connection between the officer and the man, except on formal parades. The captain of a company is nobody. He can neither reward nor punish a man, be he ever so deserving of reward or punishment. He is more of a cypher than the youngest ensign used to be half a century ago. So, also, the officer in command of a regiment is hampered and restrained on every side, till there is induced on his part a disposition to let things take their course; on the part of the non-commissioned officers and privates the habit of carping at everything that is done or proposed. It was thus that in the French army began that spirit of insubordination which reached its climax in the year that is passing, and showed itself in the disgraceful routs of Woerth and Sedan. Meanwhile, in higher places, with all the anxiety manifested to centralize power, there are mutual jealousies, official distrusts, personal antipathies, which, were the pressure of sudden war to come upon the country, would make shipwreck of the whole machine. What is the use, says Blackwood, within little more than a month of the meeting of Parliament, of disguising the truth? The new control system, and all the officials connected with it, are hated by the entire combatant portion of the army. The control, from the chief downwards, is furious at this, and hates the combatant portion of the army in return. The field-marshal commanding-in-chief has become an anomaly, with whom no human be ing appears to know how to deal. As to the militia and the volunteers-where is their arms are universally dissatisfied, and they whose business it is to keep them in good heart harass and annov them in every conceivable way. As to the stores whether of arms or ammunition-the appliances for putting an army in the field and the means of land transport-the artillery, both for the fortress and the field-they are nowhere. The New York Daily Bulletin has an interesting article upon the effect on prices, produced by the announcement of the fall of Paris. In its issue of Tuesday it says:

"Contrary to expectation, the news of capitulation of the French capital has been received by the commercial community of this city, likely to be effected directly or indirectly thereby, in a very caim manner; and in scarcely any article of merchandise do we find any unusual amount of excitement, or the sudden increase of values predicted. Indeed, in some cases the cost of goods has actually declined, and, to our certain knowledge, shippers who were supposed to be on the lookou for invoices to be sent abroad, such as provisions. &c., have been selling out supplies al ready secured. The truth is, the surrender of Paris has been a foregone conclusion for many days past, and the effect in most cases undoubtedly fully discounted. while it is also are already accumulated at various points in Europe, which must be distributed before fresh orders are likely to come to hand. Provisions were thought to be a sure trump; but aside from a little call for bucon, at former rates, and two or three sales of prime mess pork, at lower prices, there was no demand, except the usual speculative movement in mess pork at the end of the month, and lard was not only lower, but closed decidedly heavy. Breadstuffs were a little sfeamy, but the confidence was almost entirely on the side of sellers, and the amount of business really accomplished was not very large. In cotton however, the course of the market was mos surprising, even to the most persistent 'bears, the position showing no strength, and closing with sales almost impossible, except at a de cline, and the trade generally simply aston ished at the continued magnitude of the re celpts at the ports, the aggregate to-day reachholders were a little more confident in view of small stocks at present available, and the probability that Europe will soon call for increased supplies, A little time may change the position of affairs in some instances, but speculators for a rise have certainly not met

ing against the political or social integrityof the present incumbent. Their own character is not in question, but every liberalminded man will be inclined to join with the New York Evening Post in denouncing what is unquestionably, upon the face of it, an attack upon the religion of Mr. Murphy:

"Suppose thirty-five Roman Cathelic priests, peaking as priests, demanded of the President that he should appoint some other man? What outcries should we not hear about 'priestly assumption and arrogance,' about 'dangerous interference of priests with political affairs, about the 'perils of liberty,' and so on. But have not the signers of this petition put themselves out of court by their blunder? How can they, or those who support them in using their professional standing as ministers of religion to further a political aim, complain hereafter of the Roman Catholic 'influence in our politics.'

"As citizens, they have precisely the same rights as other citizens; but even as citizens, the manner of their interference would have been an indecorous proceeding towards the President. We have a right to be shocked that thirty respectable Protestant clergymen should Magazine for January is to be believed: In have committed so grave an offence against right and propriety."

Such a proceeding is unpardonable in this land of religious freedom. It is the fostering of a spirit which, if suffered to go on, will ultimately divide the country into two great religious parties, and perhaps involve it-in that most virulent of all conflicts, a religious war. A MEETING was held recently in Richmond, Virginia, having for its purpose the encouragement of immigration to that State. Several members of the Legislature were present, who favored the propriety of introducing a bill before that body embodying the views of the meeting and the suggestions that had been made. The principal plan proposed for inducing immigration was that the Legislature should authorize the railroad companies of the State to purchase land on either side the lines of their road, to be offered to immigrants at a price so low as to induce them to purchase and settle. In South Carolina the railroad companies themselves might do something in this direction.
