So still grew my heart at each tender word, That the pulse in my bosom scarcely stirred, And I hardly breathed, but only heard; Where was I?—not in the world of men, Until she woke me with silence again.

Like the smell of the vine, when its early bloom
Sprinkles the green lane with sunny perfume,
Such a delicate fragrance filled the room;
Whether it came from the vine without,
Or arose from her presence, I dwell in doubt.

Light shadows played on the pictured wall From the maples that fluttered outside the hall,
And hindered the day:ight—yet ah! not all;
Too little for that all the forest would be—
Such a radiant sunbeam shejwas to me!

When my sense returned, as the song was I fain would have said to her, "Sing it once more,"

But soon as she smile i my wish I forbore;
Music enough in her look I found,
And the hash of her lip seemed as sweet as the

A PHILOSOPHER IN THE SURF.

Horace Greeley as a Swimming Master-His Adventures with a Young Lady in the Billows. Mr. Greeley visited Fire Island, New York, on Friday to bathe in the surf. The Commercial Advertiser has an imaginary description of his efforts in the water so humorous that we copy it. It is as good as if it were SURF HOTEL, August 22.

SURF HOTEL. August 22.

"Why, he can swim like a duck," said an enthusiastic Greeleyite as he stood upon the beach to-day and watched the vegetable candidate for the Presidency buffet the billows of the Atlantic like a shirted dolphin. But the next moment a mighty breaker seized the bold swimmer and stood him upon his head, his heels beating the thin air in a desparate struggle to alter his athormal attitude. perate struggle to alter his at normal attitude.

I suppose there were two or three hundred guests, farmer folks, &c., on the shore at the time. The news that Horace was going out to wrestle with Neptune resulted in the forming of a large procession, which marched in good order to the scene of hostilities. of a large procession, which marched in good order to the scene of hostilities, and took up such favorable positions as the nature of the ground would permit. As the veteran merman emerged from the bath-house the crowd yelled approvingly, and the boys shied clamshells at him in an encouraging way.

His Apollo-like form never appeared to better advantage, and were it not for the slight tendency of his right hip to play see-saw with his left (producing a peculiar shambling gait.) he might be said to have advanced "gracefully" to the water line. Half a dozen young lady bathers had placed themselves under his protection for a plunge in the brice.

"Oh, dear Mr. Greeley, I know I can never stand it," said a beautiful blonde as a big wave burst, enveloping her little feet in the creamy foam.

"Pshaw, my dear, you needn't be afraid.
I'll protect you." And so he did, to the great uneasiness of her lover, who beheld the dexterons veteran (mistaking her neck for her waist) encircle her with his arm and drag her after him as though he meant to drown her. In four feet of water they suddenly disappeared after five peared from view, and reappeared after five seconds, the young lady in a terrible state of fright. The kind old man endeavored to ady, my dear," he said endeavoring to hide his own nervousuess, "there's no use of getting flighty. It is natural for the human family to swim."

"Oh, Mr. Greeley, how can you say so?" ex-claimed the wretched maiden, wildly spurting claimed the wretched maiden, wildly spurting the send and brine from the mouth.

"You ain't accustomed to it my child; calmly endure it a little longer and you'll like it."

"No, never, never. I want to be unnatural. I don't want to belong to the human family, Mr. Greeley, and—" here another huge breaker at short her frenzy, and lifting both bathers hurled the Sage headlong over his fair charge. A volley of cheers arose from the beach as he recovered himself, quickly selzed her by the back of her neck and one leg, and held her aloft, dripping and struggling with the fine energy that a female can exert under the pressure of mingled rage, mortification and fright.

and fright.

"She still lives," faintly murmured an old lady near me, who, when a child, had been dandled on John Quincy Adams's knee.

"Come, that's played out, old man; fetch her ashore," ejaculated an angry countryman, suggestively gathering a handful of sand. "I thought you knew better than to be yanking a poor girl round in that way."

But by this time the horror-stricken and incensed lover had waded in, boots and all, and censed lover had waded in, boots and all, and rescued his sweetheart from the perillous clutches of the chivalric merman, who stood gazing stupidly after them with his back to the sea, until the waters, collecting their strength, struck him abeam with a mighty force, and landed him sprawling far upon the beach. That ended the sweet old philanthropist's attempt to prove what "I know about natation."

END OF THE SARATOGA TOURNEY.

Southern "Fnights" Denounced as "Farm Hands at Fifty Cents a Day."

A correspondent of the Troy (New York) Times, writing from Saratoga August 18th, says: "Colonel George A. Armes, of Washing ton, and Frank Lord, of New York, have just escaped having a duel." The writer then goes on to relate an account of his interviews with the parties concerned, from which it appears that Colonel 'Armes admitted that he had sent the challenge, and gave an account of the difficulty. After stating how he came by the idea of a tournament, he said:

"I wrote to several of my friends in the South to come on and lide, and at once set to work to get the names for the committee."

Mr. Lord was absent from town, but one of his friends assured me he would ride, so I work to get the names for the committee. Mr. Lord was absent from town, but one of his friends assured me he would ride, so I put him down as one of my aids. In a few days Mr. Lord returned, and was quite angry that such use had been made of his name without his sanction. He said it must be taken off the programmes, masy of which had been printed and distributed. I made an engagement to go the printer's next day to have no more printed with his name on. On arriving at the printer's we were informed that all the programmes had been stricken off. Then I shall have to pupilish a card to-morrow stating that my name has been used in connection with this tournament without my consent, said Mr. Lord. He did so, but I took no notice of it. Then the tournament took place. Shortly after, reliable word reached me that Mr. Lord had insulted me and my Southern friends. I was told that he had remarked, in substance, that I had brought up a lot of Southern guerillas to run against Northern men, and had made a common fitty cent show of it. I immediately sent a friend to Mr. Lord to demand an apology. He said to Mr. Lord to demand an apology. He said to had intended no insult. He understood that I had remarked that he had only been a common circus rider in former days, and he thought such remarks ungentlemanly. Deeming this reply unsalisfactory, I sent Mr. Lord a challenge by my Iriend, General Thomas, giving the challenged party forty-eight hours to render an apology er accept my challenge. This was on Friday afternoon. Last evening General Thomas called upon Mr. Lord, who sent me a satisfactory reply, and, by the advice of friends, I concluded to fet the matter drop. If he had accepted the challenge I would have had him down at Glen Mitchel at daylight without fall. There is a spiendid place there upon the rocks for a due!"

The correspondent then interviewed General Thomas, who only said, "Dnel be d—d. All nonsense to talk about such a thing. I saw Lord, and the affair is settled."

Not satisfied yet, the inquirer hunted up interrogated, said:

"I have received no challenge. If such a document was sent it was never delivered. One of the Colonel's friends came to me and the colonel's friends came to me and the colonel armes. One of the Colone's friends came to the and mentioned something about Colonel Armes being insulted at something I had said. I saw that the Colonel wanted to gain notoriety, and I did not propose to have him do so by

"Then you deny having received any chal-lenge stall?" said the correspondent.
"Most emphatically," replied Mr. Lord; "I don't believe he dare send a challenge, for it don't believe he dare send a challenge, for it is a State prison offence."

"Did you send him any apology?"
"No, sir," replied Mr. Lord; "he brought up a lot of farm hands to run in a tournament, and made a fifty-cent show of the affair. I did not want my name connected with it, and that was all there was about it."
