MONDAY, SEPTEMBER 2, 1872.

NEWS OF THE DAY.

Devigent, the greatest German actor of the century, is dead.

During the last two years twenty-three thousand miles of ocean cables have been laid.

New Orleans has borrowed ten millions of dollars in London, at ninety cents on the dollar.

An Alabama man and woman, eighty-eight and seventy-eight years old, were recently joined for life.

The government will buy one million of bonds each Wednesday, and sell one million of gold each Thursday, during the month of September.

A bridge sixty-three hundred and ninety feet in length, and the largest in Germany, is shortly to be built across the Rhine at Wesel.

The London street railroad companies appear to have been matured in Titusville, Pa., to prevent new developments for a number of miles.

A plan has been matured in Titusville, Pa., to prevent new developments for a number of miles.

Nearly all producers will sign a letter to take measures to enforce prices.

Strakoski has made up his operative company for the coming season. It will include Carolina Pitt, Teresa Careno, Miss Carey, M. Lanret, Signor Del Ponte and the famous Mario.

Charles O'Connor was visited by fully a dozen reporters in New York on Thursday. He refused to talk with any of them, merely observing that he had decided not to make known in advance his political purposes.

The Western Iron and Western Nail Associations held meetings at Pittsburgh on Friday, the result of which was the decision to raise the price of iron and nails.

Professor Tyndall has perfected a new respirator for firemen, in which the solid particles of the densest smoke are arrested by films of cotton wool wetted with glycerine, and the most pungent gas by layers of charcoal.

The New York Herald, of Thursday, says in its stock market report: "The Southern State bonds were neglected and generally steady. The new South Carolinas were exceptionally active and at the same time heavy, some pretty spirited buying falling to advance the July issues beyond 25."

Rev. Father Preston, of St. Anne's Church, in New York City, has been nominated for the bishopric of Newark, N. J., rendered vacant by the elevation of the Right Rev. Dr. Bayley to the primacy.

A New York correspondent of the Chicago Tribune writes that the health of Marion Marble, of the New York World, for a long while seriously impaired, is growing worse instead of better.

The exact nature of his disease does not seem to be completely broken down; his physicians have no hope of his recovery, and, indeed, fear that he cannot live six months longer.

Mr. Thiers has cast his glance over the prospective scene of the meeting of the Emperors at Berlin and delivered his views thereon. For himself or his country he has no apprehension.

There is in politics as in love; something is sure to follow when two are together, but when three are in company nothing can come of it.

est and importance. At the opening of the session Professor A. Gray, the retiring president, gave an interesting sketch of his botanical observations at the West, referring particularly to the "big trees" of California, which are worthy of more than a passing remark.

His argument is summed up as follows: At the beginning of the tertiary period of the northern temperate zone was a region of perpetual summer. Gradually glaciers rolled down from the north, driving a warmer climate far to the south.

As these melted away vegetation extended northward, but not to its former limits. These facts furnish a clue to the history of the "big trees." If their ancestors were numbered by hundreds of thousands, their fossil remains must exist in the strata formed by the great ice flood that swept over the northern half of the globe.

Research has found the fossil sequoia gigantea through the miocene formations of Northern Europe, the specimens of which are almost the same as the "big trees" of today.

This crucial test shows that before man sprang from the dust, according to Genesis, or was evolved from the ape of Africa, according to Darwin, the sequoia gigantea belted Northern America, Asia and Europe, and the islands of the northern seas.

The Columbia Union prints the following significant dispatch: CHARLESTON, S. C., August 30, 1872. To the Editor of the Daily Union: I never said I paid General Moses thirty-five thousand dollars for any purpose whatever.

Mr. Mundella a member of Parliament, in an address to his constituents at Sheffield, England, recently, said the treaty of Washington was a guarantee that England could never again engage in a great war with any Christian or civilized community without first offering to refer the cause in dispute to the arbitration of the great powers.

"Peace hath her victories no less renowned than war," and this was a victory which the future historian and moralist would regard as greater in its influence on the future of mankind than Waterloo or Trafalgar, or Sedan or Metz.

He further advocated the extension of the suffrage to the agricultural laborers in England as a most necessary measure. They would never, he said, be truly men—free men, able to speak their minds as they ought—until they had a vote.

The London Spectator strongly advocates the same measure as the only means of stopping the oppression which the farmers are employing to prevent strikes for increased wages among their men.

her public affairs, this city and State would surge ahead with the force and rapidly which have marked the growth of the giant cities of the West.

All that we now require is patience, courage, and a continuance of hard work. There is one thing more. When Charleston is to be slandered and derided, let others do the dirty work.

Unless we speak well of ourselves others will not think well of us. The reputation of Charleston is in the keeping of her citizens. Let them, in season and out of season, spread abroad the tale of her progress, her advantages and her assured future, and our word for it, this city will soon have a widely different name from that which is allowed to be fastened upon her.

No city in the South has stridden farther than Charleston has done in these past two years; no city in the Union has a poorer character for energy and keeping abreast of the times. The reason is that too many Charlestonians take pleasure in "talking blue" about this city.

We, at least, have no misgivings as to the career of Charleston. She must become the first city of the South.

Taking the Back Track. The Columbia Union prints the following significant dispatch: CHARLESTON, S. C., August 30, 1872. To the Editor of the Daily Union: I never said I paid General Moses thirty-five thousand dollars for any purpose whatever.
