Maid of Athens! who of eld Genius, power and wealth beheld At thy merest bidding start: At thy merest bidding Idol of a poet's heart! -Could he vow thee more?-Ah no.

Though no longer subjects sue, Though they pay not tribute due, Think of him, whose memory Must a glowing solace be; He who sang thee long ago,

Why should love be overcast Linking present with the past? Usual be greet thee from the tomb. He would kiss that brow of gloom; Whisper thee in accents low, "Zoe mou sas agapo."

Could that genius lowly laid Yiew thee now. Athenian maid, Faded, poor, neglected, lone: Health and grace and beauty gone, Still his barning words would flow: "Zoe mon sas agapo."

Oh, could floods of burning tears
Solace thy declining years!
Would that lavish wealth were mine!
—Those flow now—and this were thise
For that love's immortal glow,
"Zoe mou sas agapo."

GRANT'S STABLE,

How it Came to be Built-1 Direct Violation of Law.

[Correspondence of the Cincinnati Commercial.] Washington, August 29.

I took advantage yesterday of the absence of the President and his horses to visit his stable in the rear of the White House, about which so much has been said just now. There have been some extravagant descriptions of this stable, but I am impelied to admit that it is an extravagant stable. That it was built without law with money illegally taken from the treasury, with money, indeed, that was appropriated for other purposes, would naturally give the impression that it was an economical temporary affair, erected to comply with the demands of the present Executive for increased stable room, a mere make-shift until such time as Congress could make the necessary appropriation. But this is not the character of General Grant's stable. The manner of building it, and the excuse for it, as well as some other facts, are as follows: WASHINGTON, August 29. as well as some other facts, are as follows.

THE OLD STABLE.

a very modest brick building, which was sufficiently large to accommodate President Lincoln's horses, as well as President Johnson's, with some room to spare, stood near the site of the new Scate department building, which is now being erected, and which will be by the way, if the plans are carried out, the handsomest public building in the country, always excepting the national capitol. Grant's immense stud of horses required more room, and his instincts suggested that a place where he should necessarily spend much time ought to be on a grander scale than the old stable. Congress was in session. The appropriation had been made and the site selected for the new State [department building. The stable was really not in the way. If it was, the fact was known when the site was selected, and there was plenty of time to ask for an appropriation for a new stable, but it was not done. Instead of this, while Congress was still in session, in total violation of the law which prohibits the use of money for one purpose which had been appropriated for another, and without even the advice or authority of the committee on public buildings and grounds of Congress, the new stable was begun, and it was finished in due time.

One of the highest officers of the government said he didn't "care a damn if it was THE OLD STABLE, Sallie and grounds of Congress, the lew state was begue, and it was finished in due time.

One of the highest officers of the government said he didn't "care a damn if it was built without law and in positive violation of the statutes; that it was needed, and that Congress was taken advantage of on purpose," that "if it had been proposed to build a new Mable for the White House costing thirty thousand dollars, Congress would never have authorized it," and that, "now it was built, nobody will say anything about it." The money was, it is generally supposed, taken from the appropriation for the State department. At any rate, it has never been accounted for, and no record appears regarding it. As for the stable itself, it is an extremely HANDSOME AND COSTLY STRUCTURE. HANDSOME AND COSTLY STRUCTURE.

HANDSOME AND COSTLY STRUCTURE.

The material is Philadelphia pressed brick, with Seneca stone trimmings. The windows are as elaborate, extensive and numerous as those of almost any private mansion in the city. The roof is of slate, and highly ornamental, and an elaborate cupola surmounts a stable which, in all respects, is probably not surpassed in the country. The doors and walls are of natural wood, olied and pollshed, with ornate fastenings and hinges; the stalls are made of the same materials as the doors; there are rollers to each stall to prevent the blooded horses from lajuring themselves by there are rollers to each stall to prevent the blooded horses from injuring themselves by rubbing against the hard wood; there are the most improved systems of supplying the horses with hay and grain; water and gas are never floor; there are loading rooms for horsea with hay and grain; water and gas are on every floor; there are loading rooms for grooms and coachmen; there are rooms for buggles and for carriages; there are rooms for harness, and there are elegant accommodations for the coachmen and their families. Altogether, one views the stable and its apartments with a feeling akin to regret that he is not a blooded horse belonging to the President of the United States, that he may thus occupy such charming quarters. As to the capacity of the stable, no fault can be found with that. There are in all thirteen stalls, seven of the ordinary kind and six box-stalls, ten or twelve feet square, with doors and windows like any ordinary bed-room.

West, Edw THE BAD POINT ABOUT IT. Now, all of this is not to be taken as criticism against the costly style in which this table is built and equipped. Whether it is good or too bad for the President of the United States is not a question for me to dis-fuss. My own ideas would be in favor of having as handsome a stable for the Executive Mansion as the present one, with a residence to correspond; but what is complained of is that k was built and paid for in violation of that k was built and paid for in violation of law, when there was no necessity for it. Congress was in session and might have made the appropriation. It was not even asked to do it. The old stable might have been used during the summer while the President was at Long Branch, and Congress might have been saved at the next session for the appropriation. It would no doubt have been made if the feats warranted, but it is not likely that tion. It would no doubt have been made if the facts warranted, but it is not likely that the facts warranted, but it is not likely that the facts warranted dollars would have been given, and this is why the effort was not made. It cannot be many years before a new Executive Mansion will have to be built, and it is very certain that it will not be upon the site of the present building. Then what becomes of the thirty thousand dollar stable? And as for that, what will become of the President who allowed and consented to, it he did not order, the erection of such a stable in deliberate violation of law and reason?

NILSSON'S WEDDING GIFTS. Our lady readers may have a little curiosity to know something about the presents that were made to Miss Nilsson at her wedding. They are thus mentioned in the London Court

HORSE POWER. They are thus mentioned in the London Court Journal:

A gold bracelet, set with pink coral and diamonds, from her Royal Highness, the Princess of Wales; locket, set with diamonds, emeralds, rubles and pearl, from Lady Dashwood; gold and enamelled locket, set with diamonds, from Lord Caithrope; silver tea service, from Baroness Llonel de Rothschild; three chased silver tea canisters, from Lord and Lady-Londsborough; engraved silver dessert centre plece, from Baron Leopold de Rothschild; silver gilt bread basket, from Alfred de Rothschild; silver gilt bread basket, from Alfred de Rothschild; silver gilt bread basket, from Alfred de Rothschild; silver gilt bread basket, from Mired de Rothschild; silver mounted looking-glass, from Sir Samuel Hayes; large silver soup tureen and lade, from Baroness Wilby de Rothschild; marble ermon bound jewel-case, from Dr. and Mrs. Doremus; pair of very large silver three branch girandoles, from Mrs. Lyne Stephens; pair of silver candesticks, from Dowager Countees of Essex; twelve silver gilt "apostle" dessert spoons, Mile. Tetjene; gold necklace and locket, set with coral and diamonds, Duc de Frais; travelling clock, from Miss Jessica Cavendish Bentinck; silver tea pot, sugar basin and milk jug, Mr. Pyke; black pearl ring, from Miss Gerard. Among the many beautiful presents received by Mile. Nilsson from different members of the aristocracy and other friends were some very unique, costly works of ornamental art and bijouterie, executed by Messrs. Howell and James. Mr. Streeter, the eminent jeweller of Conduit street, Bond street, was entrusted with the manufacture of the nine handsome and coetly lockets worn by the bridesmalds and other members of the bridal party. Seven of the lookets are set with rubles and diamonds, forming in a design of her own the monoram of the fair prima donna. All are machine made, and in accordance with Mr. Streeter's fixed principle of eighteen carat gold. Mr. Streeter had also the honor of supplying a costly necklace, a present to the lookets are set w fort Counties, S. C. which is a most perfect machine. was supplied by Bolland, of Chester. The cake was richly ornamented with musical trophies, and en the top was a harp composed of real pearls. It is not generally known that M. Rouzaud first met Mile. Nilsson in Paris when she took music lessons of M. Collinet. M. Rouzaud, as a lover of music, too net. M. Mousier in being one of M. Collinet's social pleasure in being one of M. Collinet's social circle. Both Monsieur Rouzaud and Misson were then comparative nobodies, and when they were thus obscure they made up their minds to marry each other.
