The Charleston News.

THURSDAY, MARCH 6, 1873.

The Charleston Daily News "is designed as the newspaper for the publication of all legal notices, and official advertisements."

Edmond Yates, the English novelist, will write up the inauguration ceremonies for the New York Herald.

Mr. Bessemer now talks of making a cannon to throw a twenty-two thousand pound ball.

The Duke of Richmond sets the price five hundred thousand pounds on his house at Charing Cross, which stands in the way of certain proposed street improvements.

The King of Bavaria has ordered a colossal sculpture of the Crucifixion to be placed on an elevation commanding the scene of the famous "Passion Play."

Twenty-five thousand dollars have been subscribed in Harbour County, Ga., for the building of a cotton factory, which will be begun forthwith.

wharves, for continuance of construction of the building for the courthouse and postoffice at Columbia, $800,000, for a screw pile light-house at the entrance of St. Andrew's Bay, Florida, $22,000, for completing the first ordered sea coast lighthouse at Alligator Reef, Florida, in addition to former appropriations, $25,000, for completing the sea coast lighthouse at St. Augustine, Florida, in addition to the former; of appropriations of $25,000 for a screw pile lighthouse to replace a lightship at Tybee Knoll, Savannah River, $18,000; for completing sea coast light, Hunting Island, South Carolina, in addition to former appropriations of $50,000; for commencing the rebuilding of the first order sea coast light on Morris Island, S. C., destroyed during the war, $60,000; for continuing the survey of the Atlantic Gulf coast of the United States, including compensation of civilians engaged in the work, $41,000; for surveying public lands in Florida, $12,000; for expenses of the office of surveyor-general of Florida, $1500.

A correspondent of the St. Paul (Min.) Pioneer describes the way in which the engineers of the Northern Pacific Railroad clear the track when it is choked by such heavy snows as fell during the middle of the month just passed. In one day nearly one hundred miles were cleared when the snow was deep enough to cover the cars completely.

The Californians search for coal with almost as much eagerness as for gold. That nature should have given their land so much, and denied it this blessing, is more than the people can comprehend. Coal, they argue, must be hid somewhere; coal like that of the Eastern States, inexhaustible, accessible and wealth-producing. So every discovery of a coal vein is hailed as a possible solution of the dark problem. Calvera County has been in a state of "intense excitement" lately on the subject. Unmistakable coal has been found. Speculators have at once flocked there and taken up land. The seams have been tested, and are of different degrees of thickness, varying from two feet for the upper to eight feet for the lower layers. These last lie twenty feet below the surface. As the mines will be in the foot hills this will not make mining difficult, as inclines can be run to tap the veins.

Mr. Horace F. Clark, president of the Union Pacific Railroad, says that over three thousand free passes have been applied for this year, many of them in the interest of members of Congress, but the executive committee have decided that hereafter no free passes over the road shall be issued. Now that the government withholds the pay for its freight, the necessity of cutting off the free list is imperative. On a recent through train on the Pacific Road there were eighty-one free passes.

There are in the Senate of the United States a number of honorable gentlemen who feel acutely the disgrace which Credit Mobiliers and carpet-baggers have fastened upon their body. Their duty to themselves and to the public is too plain to be mistaken; too serious to be neglected. The people will not hold them guiltless if they allow men like Patterson, accused of an infamous crime, to take their places among the lawmakers of the nation. And Mr. Patterson, if he be guiltless, will court a full investigation. Nay! if he be guilty, he may still, with his usual impudence, strive to brazen it out, and to persuade the committee of the Senate that he is an injured individual. So far his career has been successful. By a direct vote, to increase the salary of its own members. It is gratifying to think that these worthy fellows do not exaggerate the value of their services, and the public will agree with them that they now get quite as much pay for their labor as they are worth.

A tolerably difficult conundrum is proposed by the Boston Globe: "If the Postoffice Department can afford to transport the postal cards, even furnishing the card itself, for a cent, why cannot it transport a letter weighing the same, and without the expense of furnishing any material at all?"

The first cotton mill ever established in the Northwest was opened in Jonesville, Mich., a few days ago. The occasion was celebrated by a ball and banquet last evening, which was attended by six hundred persons. The company has a capital of $100,000, and is engaged in the manufacture of brown sheetings.

The valuation placed upon Mr. Greeley's estate indicates that he never entirely lost his communitarian notions. He probably always had doubts as to whether any man had a right to hold much property. He abandoned the attempt to reform society in that particular direction, but probably never divested himself of a suspicion that Fourier was a real statesman.

A private letter received in Norfolk, Va., states that Major Hunt, of the Egyptian army, who served on board the Confederate steamer Shenandoah, was killed late in January by a fall from his horse. The horse became unmanageable, ran off, and the rider broke in the hands of the rider. After this the animal was beyond control, and finally threw his rider against a stone wall, fracturing his skull.

A Washington dispatch says: "From letters received here it appears that there is no doubt of money being used in the late senatorial election in Florida, not, however, to any very large amount. The able legislators of that State are not very high-toned in regard to prices. According to the investigation ruling rates were a 'suit of store clothes,' a big silver watch, or enough to pay for a buggy ride."

President Grant is undoubtedly the author of the inaugural address which he delivered in Washington on Tuesday. In its bungling style and evident sincerity of purpose, it is characteristic of the man. Unfortunately, however, honesty of intention is not an antidote for the diseases which are produced by dogged obstinacy and invincible ignorance.

It was hoped that Mr. Grant would have given the country some assurance that he would shake off the corrupt politicians who have had him in leading strings since his first election, and that he would strive to become the President of the people and not of a party. With the stolid complacency which was his strength during the war, he simply declares that he has done his best and will persevere in the same course during his second term. This is not encouraging to any person who calmly surveys the history of the past four years.

To the country at large the striking feature in President Grant's address are his bold stand in favor of an extreme protective policy, and his shop-keeping talk about the Indians. To the Southern people the most pregnant passages are those which contain the unmistakable declaration that Mr. Grant is ready to go as far as the most rabid members of the Sumner school in insisting upon the absolute equality of whites and blacks. The good sense of the Southern freedmen may be trusted to blunt the edge of the sharp measures of prohibition and inhibition which will doubtless be proposed, but how far does Mr. Grant carry out the doctrines which he expounds? How often do the negro congressmen loll upon his luxurious sofas and walk with his wife and daughters? How often does the plebeian black gizzard Mr. Grant's luscious wines and smoke his fragrant Havanas? There is some reason to fear that Mr. Grant preaches what he does not practice, and, if he gave to the Southern whites the same privilege of selecting their own company which he claims for himself, there would be very little grumbling about civil rights. It is the politicians who stir up trouble by persuading the negroes that they are not truly free while they cannot trust themselves into every corner and dictate to every citizen how he should manage his business. It is unfortunate that Mr. Grant is not clear-sighted enough to see through the stale tricks of demagogical office-hunters.

As a whole the address is wretchedly disappointing, and holds out very little hope for any section of the country. The saddest part of it is that Mr. Grant is not likely to change his views; although if he were to curtail his visitation of the City Council, and pay a visit to Charleston, he may be persuaded that every negro is not a saint, and that even the "rebel demons" are not as black as they are painted.
