They will find no currency here. The only anecdote which E Aiken, Miss Carrie Aiken, W E Aiken, We may repeat, since it is not ill-natured, we may repeat, since it is not ill-natured, is the following: A well-known Prince of Erwin and son, W C McAulay, White miliar with Mr. Tennyson's shrinking home in the Isle of Wight he found him. We believe he is the only living Englishman of notoriety whose talent for pri-vacy no American has ever baffled. We may possibly have seemed to dwell somewhat over long upon this one particular trait of the poet's character; but, if we have done so, it is because we believe that it is closely ailied with his genius, and affords a key to one of the leading idiosynorasies in his writings. It is per feetly intelligent that a true poet should entertain-we must be pardoued for saying it—something very like loathing for the profane crown, when even such a court worldling as Horace experienced it in his better moments. But Mr. Tennyson's feeling on the subject is something deeper than, and different from, the natural poetic aversion to constant socisty and to assemblages of people. It includes an actual shrinking from active life and public affairs of all sorts; and if we consider a moment, we shall see that in poets of the higher sort this is rarely, if ever, found. Not to cite instances if ever, found. Not to cite instances from antiquity, though they would all fortily our argument, even the sitent and hell-communing Dante went on many embassies, and mixed himself with the affairs of Fiorenco with sufficient carnestness to get himself banished.
