The Victoria Colonist has the follow ing: The steamer George S. Wright is dose ashore, near the village of the Kuergulath Indians, a flerce tribe of savages. The Indians who brought this news to Victoria remained five days, cut damped on the beach, but any no signs of the boats or people from the wreck. The Indians from the village, who are usually very cautious about such matters; did not come near the spot. It is now thought a part or all of the crew may be prisoners in the hands of these savages the worst in British Columbia.

PAYING THEMSELVES.—Whatever, they may have done or deft moment for the people, members of Congress in the last people, members of Congress in the last directions. I was nearly blown from my moments of the session, were not unmindful of themselves. For fear, perfeet in trying to navigate among the buildings-I will not say streets. inexperienced can hardly imagine the terrible force of the wind that sweeps over these blenk prairies. Glynden needs three seedlings more than a library. Unless there is a break wind provided, library and all will some fine morning awake to find itself ten miles or so South-east of its present location. That would be bad for town lots, unless they could go also, and from the way the wind has blown lately, it looks as though they could.

In walking about the happy village of the plain, butting against the merciless wind much as a madman would against a stubborn barn-door, I chanced into the office of the Red River Gazette, the next to the last paper upon the frontier. This little journal, hanging upon the verge of civilization, as it were, presents a very creditable appearance. The editor, his passed, with a proviso that, as to the and mechanical work. The print shop salaries of Congressmen, it should take is a cozy little structure of one room, effect from March 4: 1871. Thus Con- and answers for a dwelling as well. In wife and children do all the intellectual and answers for a dwelling as well. In one corner are the cases, in another the cooking stove, table and dishes, in another the press, and in the other a bed. In the middle is another stove. It takes two stoves to have any effect on twenty square feet of this climate.

The editor was not in, but his good wife and one of his children were. The wife was writing editorials and making pies, while the child kept up fires and set type. It was a happy picture of diversified industry. By way of introducand sat down before the fire, on an ink keg, to thaw out my fingers.

"This is rather a cold day," I observed, and, by-the way, this is the manuer I always open conversation up here. There is no other way, unless a man says it is dreadful cold, and that only applies when the mercury is forty degrees below

"On, I don't know," she said, as she laid down her manuscript and took up a mince pie, "we have been thinking it was quite pleasant. It is a great improvement on the weather we have had. You were not here last month?" she

"Oh, you wouldn't have frozen," she replied, cheerfully, "unless you had been out in our terrible storm. That was awful. Human beings could not stand it."

"Were any frozen here?" I asked.
"Two," she replied. "Right out there, (pointing out of the first window, about a hundred yards from the house,) we found the body of Mr. Christopherson after the storm." 'So near this house?"

"Yes, right there, with houses all around them. But the storm was so blinding, the air so full of snow, that man could not see more than ten feet. He had come in that morning with a load of wood, bringing his two children. When the storm approached, he started back, although begged not to do so, leaving his children. He never reached his Lome, although he lived out but a mile. All we know is that his dead body was found right out there after the storm. Mr. Norris saw an object moving about on the snow, which he thought was a wolf, and started out with his gun to shoot it. Cletting closer, he saw it was a dog, and near it the body of a frozen man. The faithful dog had stayed with the body of his master for pawed away the snow from the body as fast as it fell. The poor man had got lost, and wandered about, no telling where, until at last he died right in town, and did not know it. His oxen were found imbedded in a snow drift, nothing but their heads protruding. They were not dead, but died afterwards. The chain was carefully wrapped around the yoke. Mr. Christopherson had given them a chance to save themselves when he found that he was lost.

"The other case was that of Mr. James Berry, who lived six miles of here. He had entered a farm, and was preparing a home for his widowed mother, who lives in Ohio. He lived in a cabin on his claim with another young man. He was at a neighbor's house, half a mile away, grinding his axe, when the storm came. They begged him to stay, but he laughed and said he was not afraid of that storm. He has never been seen since, either dead or alive. What is strange about it is, that his path lay along the timber, where the force of the wind was broken. But he died, and his body will likely not be found till spring. No telling how far he wandered, or how long he lived."

In every County I hear some dreadful tale of death by the storm, although it has been said that only two were frezen on the line of the Northern Pacific. The storm was as furious here as at any other point, and those who were exposed to it died. That is all. Not until spring comes and the snow melts, will the death roll be fully made out. And perhaps not then. I hear of deaths along the stage road leading into British America. I hear of them all around. Death rode on the

A COLORRO CONFERENCE INVAMENT THE dark cloud in white chokers moving on the White House; and made, one of a curious crowd to see what the demonstration meant. I learned from one of the white chokers that if was a delegation from the Methodist Conference (colored) now in session here, going to pay their respects to the President. Wishing to see how colored respects were tendered, I entered, with 500 others, and an interview was improvised in the East room. The President, sustained by a staff of the sleekest looking men I war saw, slouched into the room, and a tall, solemn son of Christianized Africa, stepped forward and addressed his Excellency. The colored brother was filled with thankfulness. He thanked God for everything, but especially for our Chief Magistrate. The pions delegation evidently thought our excellent President a precious boon Excellency has imprinted on his inteloctual countenance a perpetual expression of bore. On this occasion it deepened into one intense bore, and, with his heavy dead eyes fixed on the speaker, to seemed to be gazing through and far beyond into a dim distance, where unknown Cabinet officers may be found. He was too full for utterance, at least nothing could be understood, although I have no question but a handsome response will be gotten up and printed tomorrow. As we came out I heard one white choker say to another, "I does thank de Lord for His mercy in sparin' to dis afflicted country dat good and great man." My soul was bound in humble thankfulness, and I said, "Amen."—Don Piatt, in N. Y. Herald.

RAILROAD IRON MANUFACTURE, Eighteen years ago, (1854,) the annual consumption of railway bars in the United States was 447,658 tons. of which 339,439 tons were imported, and 108,-016 tons only were manufactured here. It will be seen by these figures that of the total American consumption of railway bars at that time, less than onethird was of American manufacture, and more than two thirds was imported. tion, I bought a few copies of the paper | Since that time there have been vast changes, both in the amount consumed and in the proportions of domestic and foreign manufacture. The figures for 1872, show a consumption of railway hars in the United States amounting to 1,504,591 tons, of which 975,000 tons were manufactured in this country, and 529,591 tons were imported. The old conditions are reversed, about two-thirds of our railway bars being inside in our own country, and about one third being of foreign manufacture.

A SLIP.—You are generally looking at something very intently when it happens —perhaps you are smaling to yourself. Then your left foot should out to one side with a suddenness that creates a sickness in the family. Ice commences to form on your spine and perspiration on your brow, and your scalp lifts enough to permit a streak of cold air to pass under. The other lags gets out at this uncture, your head enaps violently to the front, and there is a faint impression on your mind that the world is about to come to an end with nobody in charge. Miles of sidewalk spin out from you like lightning. Three story buildings jamp over your head in swift succession. People disappear suddenly and with appalling mystery. Then your eyes close, your consciousness wanes, and your soul goes out in one expiring quiver, and-and you arrive. The hard reality of the scene is then forced upon you.

The English newspapers mention a most reprehensible hoax played upon the Rev. Dr. Cumming. That gentleman was to lecture at Folkstone on "The Pope and his work in England," but just as he was about to begin, a telegram was placed in his hand, informing him that the Pope had died that morning. reverend doctor was too learned not to remember the "Nil nisi bonum." He had intended to pitch into the Pope after his accustomed manner; but how nonld he, now that the poor Pope had four days, through all the storm, and had stepped out? So he softened down his intended distribe into a mild comment on the solemn event. His feelings on discovery of the hoax, are not described

> A REMINDER OF BULL RUN .- The inauguration demonstration has one peculiar feature—the military predominates. At all other inaugurations the Philadelphia firemen made the feature. What connection the Philadelphia firemen had with inauguration, always puzzled the will and confounded the understanding. This time, the firemen succumb to the soldiery. We have not only the cadeta from West Point, and are to have the incipient Jack Tars from Annapolis, but all the independent volunteers shie to pay half fare are here in force. The Station Guards and the Washington Riflemen, and other local organizations, are all the time welcoming the Bungtown Bugles, the Boston Bucktails or Noodletoosy Sharp-sheoters; and their gay, faucy uniforms remind me of the sumpy afternoon when, on a ridge of Bull Run, I saw broken lines of baggy breeches and yellow parts and swallow-tails disappearing in the distance as if the devil was after them. And so be was, when I come to think of it.
