BREAKING UP SETTING HENS. - This is the season when every owner of hens is engaged in endeavoring to suppress the muternal instincts in one or more of them. The man comes home to supper, and the wife observes: "That yaller pullet is on the nest again." Then the man goes out to the coop, and says: "What in thunder is the matter with the beast, anyway?" and crawls in under the roost to the nest, and reaches in and brings out a hand-ful of feathers. Then the hen screams and starts for the door, and the other hens set up a howl, and likewise depart for that aperture, and the man—nearly choked by feathers and blinded by dust—falls over the water-trough and skins his ankles on the boxes, and finally bursts out into the yard with a piece of brick in each hand, and goes after that yellow pullet, with his face as red as a lobster and his back curiously wrought with mosaics from the floor of that coop. When he catches the hen, he cuffs it over the head a few times, to show it how be feels, then he jams it under a barrel and pours a pail of water through the cracks, and leaves it there till morning, when it is released, and the same operation gone over again in the evening .- Danbury News.

A DEAD LANGUAGE, INDEED.-Mr. Candolle, an author not very famous, has said what nobody but a Frenchman could have said concerning the Latin language. Every teacher of Latin who has seen or shall see his remark, has laughed or will laugh beartily at the ludicrousness, and, at the same time, the appro-priateness of the Frenchman's illustration. He is said to treat classic Latin with the utmost disrespect, declaring that it is entirely unfit for use by any person of this day, even in writing poetry. He thinks that the English is to be the universal language, (recollect, he is a Frenchman.) because important words are put first in its sentences. And then he adds that to read one of Horace's odes to an unlettered artisan, placing the words in the same relative positions that they occupy in the original, would suggest to him the idea of a dwelling house with the hall door in the third store.

SCANDAL.-The story is told of a woman who freely used her tongue to the scandal of others, and made confession to the priest of what she had done. He gave her a ripe thistle top, and told her to go out in various directions and seatter the seeds, one by one. Wondering at the penance, she obeyed, and then re-turned and told her confessor. To her amazement, he bade her go back and

THE MAN IN THE MOON.-Leaving philosophers to speculate as to whether Joaquin Miller relates a story horrible the moon was or was not the home of enough to satisfy the most ardent lover erestures more or less akin to humankind, unphilosophical folk agreed that the moon had one inhabitant at least—one of their own race, whose form was palpable to all who had eyes to see. How he attained his elevated position was in this wise: While the children of Israel sejourned in the wilderness, a man was detected gathering sticks upon the was detected gathering sticks upon the kind, unphilosophical folk agreed that was detected gathering sticks upon the pine, and buried the patients up to the Sabbath day, whereupon he was taken chin, having first taken off their clothes. without the camp and stoned until he The earth was shoveled back and closely died. Not satisfied with this exemplary died. Not satisfied with this exemplary punishment of the offender by his fellow-wanderers, the rox populi condemned the unhappy Sabbath-breaker to a perpetual purgatory in the moon, wherein he may be seen, bearing his bundle of sticks upon his back, ever climbing and climbing without gaining a step; accompanied by a dog, faithful in worse than death to a master whom an when they went to see how their companions, when they went to see how their companions, when they went to see how their companions. worse than death to a master whom an old English song-writer pictures shud-dering in constant fear of a fall, and shivering with cold as the frosty air bites every one of the six heads level with the his back through his thorn-rent clothes. ages ago, an old man went into the woods to cut sticks upon a Sunday morn; ing. Having collected as many as he could carry, he slung the bundle upon a stick, shouldered it and trudged homewards. He had not got far upon his way ere he was stopped by a handsome gen-tleman dressed in his Sunday bost, who inquired if he was aware that it was Sanday on earth, when every one was bound to rest from labor. "Sunday on earth or Monday in Heaven, it is all the same to me!" was the irreverent reply. "So be it," said his questioner; "bear, then, your fagot forever; and since you do not value Sunday on earth, you shall have an everlasting aloon-day in Heaven—standing for eternity in the moon as a warning to Sabbath-breakers!" As he pronounced sentence, the stranger va-nished, and before the wood-gatherer could apologize for his rudeness, he was seized by invisible hands, and borne to the moon, pole, fagot and all. According to another version, he had the option of borning in the sun or freezing in the number to 1,000,000. moon, and chose the latter as the least of two evils.

Traveling Northwards, we find the bundle of sticks transformed into a load of green stuff. A North-Frisian, so devoid of honest ingenuity that he could think of no better way of passing his Christmas Eve than in stripping a neighbor's garden of its cabbages, was deservedly caught by some of the villagers as he was sneaking away with his plander. Indignant at the theft, they wished the thief in the moon, and to the moon he went instanter; there he yet stands with the stolen cabbages on his back, turning himself round once on the anxiversary of his crime and its detection. New Zealanders, too, claim the man in the moon as one of themselves, their story being, that one Rona, going out at night to fetch water from a well, stumbled, fell and sprained his ankle so badly fall. that, as he lay unable to move, he cried out with pain. Then, to his dismay and towards him, evidently bent upon cap-turing him. He seized hold of a tree, and clung to it tightly, but it gave way, and fell with him upon the moon, which carried both away. Yourg Simpson, just beginning the study of natural philosophy, became fond of applying technical names to common objects to impress hearers with a sense of his profound knowledge, and tried the game with his father one evening. There is, it will be perceived, a difference of 4,503 between the two reports. The "new territory," however, has been added to the city since the United States census was taken, and the census just completed places the popula-tion of that section at 1,321, thus leaving 3,182 as the real difference between the United States census of 1870 and that taken by the city authorities, the latter making the population that much greater.
