The Holly, Laurel and Yew The white rime sits on the silvered bough, The red-berried holly, the greenspiked yew,

The shining laurel is frosted now,
And the hours of the daylight short and few.

But kind hearts beat by the bright fireside, And soft eyes sparkle by candle-light;

And we draw the curtains at eventide, Shut out the shadows, and welcome night.

The snow-flakes fall through the dark ened air, But never a morsel for that care we;

And, it may be, we have silver to spare, And can give to the homeless a penny fee.

Ah! brighter then shines the homestead fire, And dearer seem the dear faces all,

If we stretch out our hand to pull out of the mire A brother, who into it chances to fall!

As we would be done by, let us do; A blessing shall be on our labors still; And the evergreens -holly, and laurel, and yew— Be the emblems green of our hearts' good-will!

A TEYING MOMENT.—What a terrible sensation it is to get down from some elevation, where your descent depends upon making a connection with your feet, and fail to find the proper footing. Perhaps you are a large man, and are getting down from a shed roof. Your stoward is pressed against the cayer. stomach is pressed against the eaves, and your elbows are dug into the shin-gles. You have got down too far to crawl back, and are perfectly unable to see your legs or anything near them, and in this condition of complete helplessness, and perspiring at every pore, you deploy your feet in agonizing apprehension. Despite the danger of your position, you cannot help but realize the awfully grotesque spectacle you are un-avoidably making of yourself, for the benefit of prejudiced observers, and the sensation intensifies, instead of relievbonesit of prejudiced observers, and the sensation intensifies, instead of relieving, the misery. It is at each a time as this that a man understands the worth of a true wife to steady his legs and point his feet. But she is neither in sight nor hearing, and after waving and flouncing his legs until every blood vessel in his head is on the point of bursting and the pressure on his stomach threatens his spine, he either makes the connection, or, what is more probable, lets go, his hold in the madness of despair, and comes down on the hard earth as if, it were an ottoman. There are times when a wite should court sectuaion. This is one of them.

E. C. H., in the Pickens Sentinel, dreams thusly: "I dreamed that the devil oame and took me out through the bars and started with me to hell, the sense in the bars and started with me to hell, the bars and started with me to hell, the sense is a started with me to hell, the bars and started with me to hell, the bars and started with me to hell, the sense in his spine, he either makes the connection, or, what is more probable, let go, his hold in the madness of despair, and comes down on the hard spair, and comes down on the hard serving the sense in the sense the bars and started with me to hell, but said that I was a good fellow and he would give me three hours to get way from him; said that if I could tell him anything he could not do in a minute, he would let me go. I saw a great, big, twisting oak tree, and told him to tear it up, and he tore it all to pieces. The next time I told him to tear down a big hill, and he leveled it off, and then we were in sight of hell, and I was just ready to step off into the bad place, when I asked him if he could out lie the Rads, and he said, 'No, by ____, old fellow,' and told me to go back."
