The origin of the society, or, more properly, the church, dates back to the Christian era, but the first congregation organized in America was at Germantown, Penn., in the year 1721. The brave self-sacrifice of Charlie Dittman, who died at his post on the Pat. Rodgers last week, deserves to live in story as a nobler sot than that other. When the fire was discovered, he promptly turned the wheel so as to ad the boat toward the Indiana shore, but, to his horror, he found that the rudder did not answer to the wheel. It was evident that the tillerrope had been cut or had burned through. So the boat was unmanage-able, and she slowly drifted upon a sand bar, some distance from the shore, and the passengers and crew had the water before them as their only refuge from the flumes. Although his efforts to govern the boat were fruitless, Dittman seems still to have clang to the hope that the rudder would again answer to his will, and so stood at the wheel, steadfast and grand in his self-martyrdom, until the hot flames licked up the frail pilot-house, and he perished with his hands upon the wheel.
