The Crow's Children.

A huntsman, bearing his gun afield,
Went whistling merrily,
When he heard the blackest of black Call out from a withered tree:

"You are going to kill the thievish birds; And I would, if I were you; But you mustn't touch my family,

Whatever else you do!" "I'm only going to kill the birds That are eating up my crop;
And if your young ones do such things,
Be sure they'll have to stop!"

"Oh!" said the crow, "my children Are the best ones ever born: There isn't one among them all

Would steal a grain of corn!" "But how shall I know which ones

they are?
Do they resemble you?"
"Oh, no!" said the crow, "they're the prettiest birds, And the whitest, that ever flow!"

So off went the sportsman, whistling, And off, too, went his gun;
And its startling echoes never ceased
Again till the day was done.

And the old crow sat untroubled-Cawing away in her nook; For she said, "he'll never kill my birds, Since I told him how they look!

"Now there's the hawk, my neighbor, She'll see what she will see, soon; And that saucy, whistling blackbird May have to change his tune!"

When, lo! she saw the hunter Taking his homeward track, With a string of crows as long as his gun Hanging down his back! "Alack, alack," said the mother, "What in the world have you done? You promised to spare my pretty birds.

And you've killed them every one!" "Your birdel" said the puzzled hunter; "Why, I found them in my corn!

And, besides, they are black and ugly As any that ever were born!"

"Get out of my sight, you stupid!"
Said the angriest of crows;
"How good and fair her children are,
There's none but a parent knows."

"Ah! I see! I see!" said the hunter, "But not as you do, quite; It takes a mother to be so blind, She can't tell black from white!"

Twenty-three brigands, who in the summer had committed a robbery at a watering place on the French frontier, were recently brought to the scene of their exploits to be shot there by Spanish troops. The troops were at fifteen yards distance. Ten men fell at the first fire. Eight fell at a second fire and the other five ran away, the bullets having cut the cords that bound them. One was last seen pursued four soldiers, who continued firing. How many lives has a cat?

Transient sivertisements and notices must be paid for in advance. This rule will be adhered to hereafter.
