BEECHER ON DRUGS AND MEDICINES

Referring to the want of fidelity between man and man, which begets a spirit of fraud, he says: "Medicines are adulterated; bread is adulterated; coffee is mixed; your sugar is adulterated." This is all true; and we may add some startling revelations with regard to the adulterations and mixture of medicines, which our people, with blind credulity, swallow upon faith: Brandreth's Pills contain extract of pokeberries, saffron, cloves, aloe; Radway's Relief contains tincture of pepper, alcohol, camphor; your spices, too, are mixed with saw-dust and ground-up rusty ship crackers; cream of tartar is mixed with white earth and lime, and cooking soda is a mixture of powdered washing soda. Your security, then, is to buy articles prepared at home, of warranted purity and approved worth.

Heinitch's Baking Powder—cook's favorite—is the best and cheapest. Heinitch's Pure Baking Soda and Cream Tartar, for bread and biscuit. Heinitch's Pure Ground Pepper, Mustard and Cinnamon. Heinitch's Pure Flavoring Extracts. Heinitch's Paster Liniment better than Ready Relief; a speedy cure. Heinitch's Blood and Liver Pills, entirely vegetable, and a marvelous medicine for the Liver, Stomach and Bowels. Heinitch's Blood-Purifying Liver Pills cures Liver Complaint, Headache, Stomach Disorders, Indigestion and Constipation.

Stanley's Cough Syrup cures all kinds of Coughs, Hoarseness, Bronchitis, inopportune Consumption. Try it; don't delay. A Cough gets worse with every day's neglect. Medicines of all kinds, of warranted quality, at the lowest prices. Make but one trial and be convinced.

ANTICIPATE THE ENEMY—Rational reader, if the aspect of the weather was uncertain, you would not be foolish enough to venture out without an overcoat or an umbrella.

Have the forecast, then, to protect yourself at this dangerous season with something more important than either of these articles. Strengthen your stomach and nervous system, regulate your liver and your bowels, tone all your organs and cheer your animal spirits with that agreeable cordial, tonic and alterative, Hostetter's Stomach Bitters. So shall you surely escape the diseases which fasten upon the feeble and debilitated. "Softer and be strong," says the proverb; but "Be strong that you may not suffer," is the wisest maxim—and of all strengthening preparations this is the safest, the surest, the most genial. As a remedy, as well as an antidote, for dyspepsia, fever and ague, and liver disease, there is no combination of vegetable specifics at present known which even approaches it in efficacy. Anticipate the enemy! The elements of innumerable diseases are afloat in this raw, damp, mephitic winter air. Will you defend yourself against them or not, good reader? That is the question. A bottle or two of the great defensive medicine of the age, Hostetter's Bitters, will so strengthen and brace up your bodily powers as to enable them to "laugh a siege to scorn." The morbid matter which was exhaled in perspiration through your pores in summer finds no such free egress now. A powerful counteracting agent is, therefore, needed, and you have it in Hostetter's Bitters. They neutralize the malarious morbi, from which disease originates, and regulate all the secretory organs. Nothing can be more harmless or more healthful; nothing so potent to prevent or cure biliousness, dyspepsia, fever and ague, constipation and general debility, as this wonderful corrective.

AGRICULTURAL LIENS.—If you have not already ordered your Agricultural Liens to secure advances, do so at once.

Walker, Evans & Cogswell, Charleston, S. C., keep on hand four different kinds, and if neither of these meet your views, they are prepared to print, at the lowest prices, any special form to order. If the Planter or Farmer has not yet bought the Rural Accountant, a book for simple farm accounts, let him do so at once. They also have a New Agricultural Lease which gives the Landlord a lien on crop of tenant. This is very valuable.

OUR CHARITIES.—She died on Thursday night, and on Friday afternoon was carried from the fourth story of a cheap tenement house in a stained pine coffin. It must have been a relief to die, for after death there is at least no hunger; and, as it would have been but for the two children who leaned on her as on a reed that breaks beneath the weight. Naturally, she was anxious for them, and it is not strange that, while she lay in her coffin abroad, the four strangers besides the clergyman who attended her funeral remarked a lingering, care-worn expression, as though the last sleep, which is said to smooth out all wrinkles, had been powerless to efface her solicitude. It was hard to leave those little ones to the uncertain charity of a fickle world, but doubtless the sisters who supplied the slender wants of the invalid will see to it that they have some roof to cover them and clothing to keep them from the pinching cold.

One of the most beautiful results of an advanced civilization is the dispensation of charity. A practical religion that sees a brother or a sister in every sufferer and recognizes the claim of the weak upon the strong is one of the finest illustrations, while it is the strongest proof, of the divine origin of revelation. The religion which consists of a regular and punctual attendance upon the services of the church is doubtless valuable. The Sabbath, with its rest and quiet, its sleeping commerce and its closed doors and barred windows, is an invaluable conservator of the public morals. But that other kind of religion which is the embodiment of obligations and duties, which, like a loadstone, draws the gold of the rich toward the cheerless hearths and empty larders of the poor, contains an element which works like magic on the general health of the community. The Christianity of a creed is well, but that of a noble life is the true evangel that charms the gullest ear with its refrain, "Peace on earth, good will to men."

The story goes that she had seen better days. She could hardly have seen worse. Only ten years ago she was the mistress of a freestone front, admired for her grace and beauty, and courted for her wealth. Her husband was a successful dealer in stocks. When the war broke out he had little or nothing. When Lee gave his sword to the victor he counted his wealth by millions, and was generous to a fault. But who can tell what changes may occur in the mercantile life of New York in the course of a few years? We are like a huge cauldron of water kept at the bubbling, boiling point all the time. The hurrying drops which are at the bottom to-day rise to the top to-morrow, while those which to-day fondly dream that they are permanently secure at the top, suddenly begin to sink, and do not rest until they touch the bottom. So this man's hundreds of thousands faded away into mere thousands, and his thousands, as though saturated with the demoniac spirit of ill luck, became paltry hundreds, which melted like snowflakes when they fall on the river. He could not endure the shock, and his end was chronicled in an obscure corner of the daily paper under the heading "Painful Suicide."

The mother was horror-struck as she folded her babes to her bosom and stared the world in the face. The old acquaintances? They were as though she had never been. They flattered past her on the December side-walk with their silks and furs, but they neither knew her nor cared to remember her. She had dropped from "the set," and that was enough. She sewed with bleeding fingers and a broken heart, and somehow the tears unbidden fell on her pale cheeks as she thought of the past and sighed at the frailty of human friendship. She could just pay the rent of two dingy rooms on the fourth story back in a dark and unwholesome alley by working fourteen hours a day. But, unfortunately, poor people have nervous systems, and fourteen hours' work, with insufficient food and broken rest, brought her to the edge of the grave. Just then the friendly knock of charity was heard, the few wants of the broken-hearted were supplied, and, with a last, long, agonized look—a look and a prayer in one—she was lifted out of her rags and out of the pestilence of that dark alley into Heaven. What a change! This is but a single illustration of the vicissitudes and the sadness which are occurring every day, and which are inevitably connected with the life of a great city. Who can doubt the value of those manifold charities which are the benedictions of the age, and who can withhold his sympathy or his purse from those institutions, the offspring of every church, which are the almoners of our good will to the poor and unfortunate? New York is generous in every direction. Its people are impulsive and sympathetic. It may be gasping and hard in its mercantile life, but it is never forgetful or neglectful of the claims of that large class which finds it hard to live. It listens to the eloquence of its favorite preachers when they discourse of faith and hope, but it is not unmindful of the fact that "the greatest of these is charity."—New York Herald.

A Herald special letter from Sydney, New South Wales, supplies the following intelligence: The scientific world has sustained a severe loss by the death of Professor Wilson, of the Melbourne University, who closed a useful career by writing an elaborate paper on his observations of the transit of Venus. He finished it in the small hours of the night and died suddenly within the same day.

MAX ADELER'S RIVALRY IN CHAIR.—I learn from a newspaper that "a Kansas widower was tarred and feathered the other day because he didn't wear deep enough mourning for his departed spouse." This reminds me of the contest that has been raging in our village between Brown and Jones. Both of them lost their wives on the same day, and, after the funerals, Brown appeared again in public with three inches of crape on his high hat, while Jones only had two. Jones was so much afraid people would think he didn't mourn for his wife as deeply as Brown grieved for his, that he added four inches of crape to his hat, whereupon Brown, apprehending that people would believe that he thought more lightly of his loss than Jones did of his, put eight inches of crape on his hat. Then, Jones determined not to be outdone as a mourner for the dear departed, put on so much more crape that it extended considerably above the top of his hat crown. Whereupon Brown became excited, and, cutting the crown from his old hat, he devoted it to his new one, and swathed it in crape to the summit. Jones was unwilling to display envy, but the memory of Mrs. Jones was so scored to him that he enveloped his hat in paste-board four feet high, and wrapped it all in the blackest crape he could buy. But Brown, feeling that his love for Mrs. Brown demanded energetic action, bought fifteen feet of stove-pipe, jammed it down over his hat, banded it with 200 yards of crape, and once more appeared upon the street. Then Jones sent to the city and ordered a hat eighty feet high, craped six inches thick. It was sent home from the freight office on a dray, and the next morning Brown knocked off, married the Widow Metcalf, and resumed business in a straw hat. Jones is having his mourning hat cut up into lengths, and he hopes to be able to fill his beds with them, if his side last in the election.

A fire-shield has been invented by Capt. Elijah Low, of Bangor, Maine, intended to meet a want long felt by firemen in preventing fire from leaping across a street or to adjoining buildings. "This shield," says a local journal, "gives the firemen a great advantage, in that while they can approach at working distance the hottest fire, they can command the opposite side of the street, or any adjoining building which could not be approached in any other way. The device is light and portable—two men can easily handle it—about fifty-four inches in width by six and one-half feet in height, with a protecting curve at the top, the whole being of galvanized iron. Near the centre, and on a level with the eye, is an orifice some eight inches in diameter, which can be wholly closed or opened sufficiently for the introduction of the nozzle of the hose when playing. The patent also includes the insertion of a small window of mica, through which the fireman can watch the action of the flames while fighting the hottest fire in safety."

Trouble in the cotton mills of Fall River, Massachusetts, probably reached a culmination Saturday, and a disastrous and general strike seems inevitable. A conference of manufacturers, at which a delegation of disaffected weavers was present, was held Saturday evening, and after lengthy discussion a proposition was agreed upon virtually giving back to the operatives one-third of the ten per cent. reduction. A meeting of the weavers of the Merchants' and Granite and Crescent Mills was immediately held, and it was unanimously voted to refuse anything short of the restoration of their full pay. The two weeks' notice of the weavers in the two last named mills was on Saturday night, and of the Merchants' on Monday night. The operatives are, therefore, on a strike, which must cause a stoppage of these three mills. Much excitement exists over the matter.

A singular case of hydrophobia, and one which has thus far baffled medical skill, has occurred near Pittsburg, Pa. A young man was bitten in the hand by a dog three months ago; the wound healed, and nothing but a scar remained to indicate that the member had even been wounded. The other night the young man's bed-fellow was awakened by hearing him clawing at the bed clothes and barking like a dog; and, on rousing him, was attacked with terrible fury. He seized his friend and held him down, but had to exert all his strength and dexterity to avoid being bitten. The patient has been removed to the Western Pennsylvania Hospital, at Pittsburg, but is not expected to recover.

The latest proposition is to raise the tax on all grades of sugar half a cent per pound. A Washington special to the Chicago Times says that speculators, commercial gamblers and lobby sharks swarm around the door of the Committee on Ways and Means, catch the members as they emerge, and follow them home with frantic appeals for points. Of course, if the positive action of the committee could be known twenty-four hours in advance of its general publication, fortunes could be made by judicious handling of staples on which a large increase of taxation might be recommended.

A party of Pennsylvanians are making a tour of this State, noting the opportunities and inducements for investments. They arrived in Charleston, Wednesday, by a special car. It has been cold enough in Kansas to freeze whiskey, and some of the drunkards there have become solid men.
