THE PHCENIX.

A desperate character has fallen into the clutches of the law near Stanford, Ky., whose whereabouts remained for some time very shrewdly and successfully conceal-ed from the officers. The man, whose name is Bridgewater, had a retreat in the woods at some distance from his home, and did not betray himself in the necessary and frequent communication with the latter place, a small but intelligent dog acting as messenger. Bridge-water's hiding place was between a couple of huge chestnut logs, over which at night a piece of oil cloth was thrown. Whenever it became necessary to send word to friends, or to receive a message from them or to receive a message from them, the outcast would tie his communior to receive a message from them, the outcast would tie his communi-cation about the dog's neck and dispatch him on the journey, which would be accomplished in a very short space of time. Two other large dogs ranged about in the immediate vicinity of the hiding place and gave prompt notice of the appearance of any stranger in the neighborhood. Thus guarded by four-footed allies and in full communication with his friends, the outlaw for a long perion set his pursuers at defiance. It seems evi-dent that Tray is still ever faithful, and doesn't care a cent on which dent that Tray is still ever faithful, and doesn't care a cent on which side he fights. As an illustration of the limit-less number of combinations which the three primary colors are capa-ble of, it may be interesting to know that in the Gobelin tapestry manufacture 28,000 distinct shadings of yarn are employed, each one distinguished by the practiced eye.
