SOUTH CAROLINA AND THE CENTENNIAL.
 The New York Herald says:

We publish a letter from Governor Chamberlain, of South Carolina, expressing the cordial interest of the people of that gallant State in the Philadelphia Exposition, but confessing that nothing has yet been done to enable its citizens to be represented with advantage on that occasion. He will recommend an appropriation at the next meeting of the South Carolina Legislature, and hopes there will be a creditable exhibition of the products of the State. But we fear that the means of South Carolina bear but a slender proportion to her patriotic good will. While she is rich in revolutionary memories and distinguished names, the misgovernment of recent years has left her poor in resources. But the wealth of a State is no criterion of its patriotism and valor. The countrymen of Wallace or of Tell would not have made an imposing figure in a centennial exposition of art and industry, and South Carolina may rival either of them in the poetry of heroism. Where in our revolutionary history can we look for parallels to her Sumter and her Marion? Bryant's noble "Song of Marion's Men" is one of the many spirited things inspired by the romance of South Carolina's part in the revolution.

Well knows the fair and friendly moon
 The band that Marion leads—
 The glitter of their rifles,
 The scampering of their steeds.

The Draytons, Pinckneys, Rutledges, Middletons and Gadsdens were men of high culture and statesmanlike views, as well as devoted patriots, and South Carolina was also illustrious by her Moultrie, Laurens, Horry, Pickens, Williams, the Hammonds and many others who rendered signal service in the revolution. The Philadelphia exposition will of course be no representation of the revolutionary services of the States. Of the thirty-eight which will participate in this exposition only thirteen have any revolutionary memories at all. South Carolina was the peer of any of the thirteen, but she cannot take her famous battle grounds to Philadelphia. She will do what she can and do it heartily; for no State will be in more complete sympathy with the occasion.

The new navy uniform buttons up close around the throat, and the orthodox sailor, with his big open collar, will live only in the memories of the past.
