Sixteen Days Later from Europe,

STEAMER CALDONIA

The steamship Caldonia, Capt. Cot., arrived at the wharf of Boston, on Monday, at 3 p.m., from Liverpool, and had been in London, the province of India, and the Cape of Good Hope, and the Red Sea and Suez Canal, and arrived at the wharf of Boston, on Monday, at 3 p.m., from Liverpool. The ship was a large, well-ballasted vessel, and the passengers were comfortable during the voyage. The weather was calm, and the ship made good speed.

The most important event of the voyage was the landing of the large quantity of Indian cotton, which was shipped in the hold of the ship. The cotton was of the best quality, and was in great demand in Europe. The passengers were well pleased with their voyage, and the crew worked well.

For the Shippers

The ship is well-ballasted, and has a large quantity of ballast, which will enable her to weather any storm. The passengers were well satisfied with their voyage, and the crew worked well.

The offer of the Captain, being agreed to, the ship was made over to the Government, and the passengers were well satisfied with their voyage, and the crew worked well.
