BIBLE CONVENTION OF S. C.

The Executive Committee having been advised that the ends proposed by the Bible Convention of December last, would be promoted by the publication of some practical suggestions on the mode of carrying out the enterprise, they respectfully submit to the members of the District Committee, and others interested in the object, the following facts and views.

In Kershaw District, the distribution has been effected through an agent employed by the Camden Bible Society, who went through the entire district. They write that "the agent has completed his work, and every destitute person in the district has been supplied with the Bible."

In Richland the same course has been adopted; and an efficient agent is now engaged in visiting every part of the District.

In Greenville, the District Committee, and the Committee of the Greenville Bible Society have determined to divide the District among themselves, and to superintend personally the supply, so that all their funds may be used for the purchase of Bibles. The plan upon which the District is divided, is worthy of notice, as affording an idea of the most efficient practical plan which can be adopted in many sections. Each member of the Committee has taken one or two Beat Companies. At a muster ground the great majority of families in the beat are represented, and the names of all not represented can there be learned, and their residences. These will be visited by the distributors, and their wants ascertained and supplied.

The modes of organizing in other Districts which are proceeding in the supply of their destitute, have not been communicated. In some Districts or sections, the division and subdivision of the work may be advantageously determined by the streams and roads, which interest them; or by settlements where they are so separated as to be capable of designation.—In reference to a division by beats, it may be observed, that the commanding officers of companies are understood usually to have on their rolls, not only the names of persons subject to ordinary militia duty, but of the alarm men also. The beat rolls would therefore afford the Committees important aid, both in the division of the work, and in rendering the enquiry and supply, thorough and complete.—Beats may be subdivided, as convenience may suggest.

It is presumed that whenever some plan of distributing the duty is agreed upon, pious persons of leisure will afford the Committee their co-operation, as visitors and distributors, in their own neighborhoods.

The details of enquiry and distribution must depend, in a good measure, upon the discretion of the individuals. But the following suggestions, which have been left in most of the districts visited by the agent, may be useful to all who may undertake this pious and charitable office, viz:

1. Every family and every reading individual to be enquired of.
2. The Bible to be sold to such as are willing and able to purchase.
3. If unable to give the price asked, the cheapest Bible to be sold them at their own price.
4. If unable to buy, the cheapest Bible, to be given.
5. The smaller Testament to be distributed chiefly to children.

The distributors are supposed to be supplied with Bibles and Testaments of different qualities and sizes, suited to the different circumstances and ages of persons. A list of the several kinds kept on hand by the Bible Society of Charleston, with the price of each, was added to our Circular addressed to the District Committees in February last.

In that Circular, the several Committees were requested to report, by the 1st of October next, the progress made in each District or Section, in carrying out the views of the convention. We beg leave to renew the request, and state again the points of information which is desired. The Reports should embrace, in order that the Convention, on their re-assembling in Columbia, on the 25th November next, as agreed upon, may proceed with full and definite information, in the prosecution of the important work. The points are:

1. The destitution of the Bible, found by enquiry to exist, with the number of families and individuals to whom the enquiry has extended.
2. The number of Bibles, and the number of Testaments given gratuitously, and of what kinds.
3. The number of each sold, and of what kinds.
4. The mode in which the distribution has been effected; whether by Societies or by the Committees; and the arrangement adopted to facilitate the work.
5. The mode adopted to raise funds for supplying the District, the amount obtained, &c.
6. To what extent you believe the supply of the District to be effected.
7. Whether any and what Society existed, their present state, and what new Societies have been formed.
8. Any other information that may be useful to others in performing the like duty, or interesting to the Convention.

Editors of papers friendly to the object of the Convention, it is believed, will promote the enterprise, by giving one or two insertions to this paper.

UNIVERSITY MEDICAL SCHOOL. Operations.

On Saturday last the professors, as usual, performed a number of interesting surgical operations. The amphitheatre was crowded by upwards of three hundred gentlemen, amongst whom we recognized many of the most eminent physicians in the city. Indeed the whole scene presented a most interesting spectacle, and was well fitted to afford the highest gratification to every friend of the interests of science and humanity. The interesting and important nature of the operations themselves—the beautiful and scientific manner in which they were performed—the instructive and philosophical remarks of the professors—and the respectability and marked attention of the numerous and delighted auditory, were all calculated to justify the anticipation of the most beneficial results to surgical science, not only in this city but throughout the whole country.

After one or two cases of strabismus had been operated upon with the fullest success, a middle aged man was introduced, whose case presented an instance of rather singular character:

Deformity of the Hand.—The middle finger of one hand was drawn towards the palm of the in such a degree as entirely to prevent its extension, thus producing great inconvenience, and operating very much against the usefulness of the hand. The professor remarked that the peculiarity in the case was that the contraction was confined to a part of the muscles.—This phenomenon had been accounted for in the most philosophic and satisfactory manner by Dr. Detmold. There was one set of muscles whose action was to extend the fingers, and another set which acted with a directly opposite effect. These muscles were constantly in a state of tonic action, although not always fully contracted, and Dr. Detmold's theory was that the power of one series of muscles was increased, whilst the antagonizing muscles had either the power not increased, or probably diminished, and that whether this abnormal condition originated in utero or at any period subsequent the effect was the same.

The professor then having remarked that the mode of treatment was simply to divide the tendons, introduced a sharp bistoury beneath the integument in the palm of the hand, and divided the tendons of the common flexors of the finger. In this case, however, owing to the adherence of the integument to the tendon, a second incision was completely successful in effecting the extension of the finger. The patient was then dismissed to the ante-room to leave a splint applied for the purpose of keeping the finger extill the cure would be entirely effected.

Stammering.—A young lad was then brought in who came to be cured of an inveterate habit of stammering.

"Do you stammer?" asked the Professor.

The poor lad could reply only by a nod.

"Have you always stammered?"

"Y-y-y-yes!"

"What is your name?"

"Ja-Ja-Ja-James Ab-Ab-Ab—" and then the sufferer gave up in apparent despair the attempt to complete his answer.

"Do your father and mother know of your coming here?"

"My fa-fa-fa-fa-father is d-d-d-dead!"

As this was so bad a case, the Professor stated that he would try an entirely new operation. The only way to obtain correct views of the extraordinary phenomena of stammering was to make them the subject of patient and persevering experiment and calm legitimate deduction. The course he intended to follow in this case was a cupuncturation of the tongue.

The patient was then placed in a chair, and the Professor seating himself before him, passed three needles through the base of the stammering tongue. The lad screamed a little, and put his hands to his ears—the pain resulting from the injury of the gustating branch of the fifth pair of nerves, and passing along it in its course. The needles were drawn out—the patient washed his mouth with a little water, and then the Professor smilingly asked—

"What is your name now?"

"The same, sir, as it was before!" immediately and without the slightest hesitation replied the boy.

The effect was magical—the Professor himself looked up in admiring surprise—and the amphitheatre shook with enthusiastic applause.

"What is it then?"

"James Abbot, sir," the boy again promptly and readily answered, and again the astonished admiration of the spectators burst forth.

A scrap of newspaper was then handed to the boy, and he read from it with the most perfect ease! The subject of this almost miraculous cure was then dismissed, with a request to return next Saturday and discover whether his difficulty of speech had been effectually and permanently removed.

The happy result in this case was doubtless owing to the effect upon the imagination, for in two other cases in which the operation was performed, by no means such favorable effects followed, although a slight relief seemed effected.

Imperforate Noes.—The next case was that of a child of four or five years old whose nostrils had been almost entirely obliterated by the small pox. The Professor remarked that he did not recollect meeting with any case in which the closure was so complete. One nostril admitted a small probe; the aperture in the other was still smaller. It is probable, we suppose, that this closure followed the healing of pustules in the nostrils.

The little fellow, who was brought by his father, was then placed in the chair, and the Professor, with a sharp pointed bistoury, laid one nostril open. A plug of dry sponge was then introduced, for the purpose of keeping the aperture open, and after the young patient had been quieted by the donation of a small sum of that article so eagerly sought after by—

"Children of a larger growth," and who so nobly sacrifice health, honor, principle and life, in its pursuit, he was carried away by his father, and the interesting proceedings of the day were over.

From a letter published in the New York Commercial Advertiser we make the following painfully interesting extract, describing some of the incidents which befell Mr. Clemens, the mate of the steam-boat Erie, at the time of her conflagration, as they were related by Mr. C. to the writer. After mentioning the appalling condition of the boat; wrapped in a sheet of flame, the letters say—

Mr. Clemens then proposed to the captain that they should look to their own safety, which was agreed upon, and the latter immediately leaped into the water; the former seized a bench, which was on fire, and threw it overboard, but it was immediately grasped by two of the Swiss emigrants; a like attempt was made with a second bench, but this also was taken possession of by some of the passengers in the water. Mr. C. then concluded that his only hope was in swimming; jumped into the water, and made for the shore; after swimming about ten rods it occurred to him that it would be better to wait until the vessel burned to the water's edge, and if the wreck then floated to remain by it; with this view he turned his face again toward the boat, but the sight which then met his eyes was one (to use his own words) which, "though I cannot find words to describe it, neither time nor change of scene or circumstances can ever obliterate from my memory."

The whole of the vessel, with the exception of a small part of the forward deck, was one mass of fire lighting up the whole heavens; as the flames would wave to and fro he could see the bodies of some of the passengers writhing as it were in their agony, and endeavoring to throw themselves overboard, but apparently not possessing strength to get over the rail—while on the fore part of the deck were seen a dozen or more wildly throwing about their arms and filling the air with cries and shrieks which seemed to pierce his very heart. In fact, said Mr. C., "so horrible and dreadful was the sight, that I at one time felt almost ready to suffer myself to sink beneath the water, without an effort to save myself, that the scene might be hidden from my view." He again turned from the boat and saw a plank floating about, on which were two of the crew. They called to him to get on it. He did so, but it barely supported them all; fortunately he perceived the drawer of a bureau near, by, which he reached, and placing it bottom upward under the plank, it floated with more ease.

He had not been on the plank many minutes before he perceived an elderly man swimming by, nearly exhausted; he called to him, and relinquished his place on the plank to the old man, when he again trusted to his swimming. It was not long, however, before he met one of the "fenders;" and he saw two more of the passengers; this he also gave up to them. After swimming about alone for some minutes he was hailed by the captain, and turning round saw him and four of the crew on the yawl, which was bottom up. He also got on it, when the captain informed him that there was a lady floating by. He soon discovered her. This was Mrs. Lynde; a life preserver was about her neck, but not one quarter filled with air; her hand grasped an oar, and she was to all appearance dead.

Mr. C. thought that by filling the life-preserver she must continue to float, and if picked up be recognised by her friends. With this in view he applied his mouth to the tube and commenced filling it. While so doing Mrs. L. faintly spoke, and said, "you are very kind, sir." Finding she was alive he continued to fill the life-preserver, but so exhausted was he that he could do it but imperfectly. He then drew her toward the yawl, when she revived a little and said, "save me if you can, but rather use all your efforts for yourself, and let me die if I cannot be saved without sacrificing others." Such language from a female, said Mr. C. should be rare; and his efforts were constantly directed to her, and successfully. They continued on the yawl for about two hours, when the De Witt Clinton rescued them.

From the Franklin Palladium.

Among the most interesting and civil causes which came on for trial was that of Patrick McFarland vs. John McNulty.—It was an action brought by the plaintiff, for the seduction of his daughter by the defendant. The character of the parties the relation in which they stood to each other, and some of the facts and circumstances elicited on the trial, rendered it peculiarly interesting and exciting. The defendant is a Roman Catholic Priest, residing at Hogansburg, in this country; his parochial duties have frequently called him to this town, on which occasions he has made the plaintiff's house his home, up to last November.

The plaintiff is a respectable farmer and has resided in this town for about fifteen years, and is a prominent member of the Roman Catholic church. Ann M'Farland, the daughter of the plaintiff—to recover damages for whose seduction this suit was commenced—is about 19 years of age, an only child. She is also a member of the same church and has been for the last three or four years in the habit of frequently visiting Hogansburg and spending several days, and sometimes weeks at a time, in the family of Mr. McNulty. It was during one of these visits that the seduction was charged to have taken place. The cause was ably managed on both sides. For the plaintiff, Messrs. Hascall, Parkhurst, Stow and Beckwith. For defendant, Messrs. Foote, Jackson and Gillett. The Jury, after being out about one hour, returned into Court with a verdict for the Plaintiff of $2,500.

DR. TAYLOR'S
BALSAM OF LIVERWORT.

HAS been used successfully for eight years in the cure of these diseases. Remember! the original and genuine is made only at 375 Bowery, New York; all others are spurious and unauthorized!

CONSUMPTION AND LIVER COMPLAINT!
As a general remedy for these diseases, I am fully satisfied from Balsam of Liverwort. Being purely vegetable, it can be used with the utmost safety by all persons in every condition. It cleanses the lungs by expectation, relieves difficult breathing, and seems to heal the chest. There can be no question, but this medicine is a certain cure for chronic coughs and colds. I have used it for four years in my practice, and always with success.
A. F. ROGERS, M. D.

Consumption! The following remarks were taken from the last number of the Medical Magazine:
"The surprising effect produced by Dr. Taylor's Balsam of Liverwort, in consumptive cases, cannot fail exciting a deep and thrilling interest throughout the world. We have so long believed this disease (consumption) incurable, that it is difficult to credit our senses when we see persons evidently consumptive, restored to health. Yet this is a fact of daily occurrence; how then can we question the virtue of the above medicine? In our next we shall be more explicit; meantime we hope physicians will make trial of this medicine, and report its effect to us."
Note—The original and genuine Taylor's Balsam of Liverwort is made and sold at 375 Bowery.
