MANURE.

To the Editor of the Southern Planter: Dear Sir: Manure has been very justly style 1 the " Sheet Anchor of t e Farmer"-as such, I esteem it. Every dir cted effort, therefore, to improve the quantity and quality should be regarded with interest by intelligent and enterprising far-mers. I shall attempt, in as plain a man-ner as I can, to throw out some hints by and without the limits of this Star, and having which both quantity and quality of mawhich both quantity and quarters a nile to the d thereto. nure may be greatly improved. Farmers a nile to the d thereto. It is or lered, That the sail D feedlant do appear It is or lered, That the sail D feedlant do appear should make their stable floors where hor- , should make their stable floors where hor-ses or other anima's are kept perfectly tight so that none of the urine would pass through them, and they should elevate the floor a little next to the manger, so that floor a little, next to the manger, so that ihe urine may flow out; fix underneath the lowest point of the floor, a gutter or conductor to receive the urine, so constructed as to convey it to a reservoir, prepared to receive it, which must be well sheltered, and protected from the weather .--The reservoir may be made of timber or of bricks. It of the latter, it should be well plastered on the inside with hydraulic cement, to make it tight. Let the old solid excrements, with the ordinary cleanings of the stables, be thrown into this resorvoir, with the liquid; put also, for every layer of the solid excrements of a foot in thickness, a thin layer of plaster of Paris. I will briefly state my reasons for recommending this plan The liquid excrements are of so much greater value than the solid; as stable floors are generally constructed whole of the liquid is lost, except what is absorbe ' by the the solid excrements and the litter.

It is the liquid excrements alone, which enables the solid excrements to emit ammonia, which being thrown out in the usual way, unprotected from the weather, the mom int putrefaction takes place, he ammonia escapes into the atmosphere, in the state of carbonate of amm mia and is lost; the other soluble salts are washed out by the rain; the remainder is of but little coun. parative value. The plan proposed has this advantage, first, a saving of all the urine, (any one who may practice this plan effectually, will soon be astonished at the quantity of urine lost;) secondly. protection from weather; and thirdly, all the ammonia will be retained. Plaster of Pars being the sulphate of lime, will convert all the carbonate of ammonia (which is very volatile) into the sulphate of ammonia, which has no volatility: thus the whole value of the manure is retained for the use of the crop. Having been for the last six months, engaged in manufacturing equal to eight thousand, seven hundred and thirty chemical manures from human excrements, I have been compelled to turn my attention to the study of agr:cultural chemistry, I can, therefore, with confidence recommend the above plan to your numerous readers. Manure, made in this manner, will be vastly superior, perhaps ten ti nes as valuable as that made in the usua way. I am making an interesting experiment upon wheat with urate, and in the spring I shall make an experiment with poudrette and bone dust on corn. The results I will make known in due time to my brother farmers throug you ' Our-na!. GEORG WOODFIN. na!.

Mr. Woodfin. from the official stati m wh ch h fills, nas a most excellent opportunty of experimenting upon urate and p-udrette, which are exciting s , much attention in the agricultural world. This op-
