AGRICULTURE.

HOW SUPERPHOSPHATE IS MADE.

Hon. Simon Brown, in his lecture before the Agricultural Convention at Manchester, on "Artificial Fertilizers," said superphosphate of lime was made in the following manner:

Bones are collected from every possible source—boys and girls gather them in the streets of cities; butchers and provision dealers save them; men traverse the country with horses and wagons picking up from houses every pound they can get...

The bones are now reduced to what is called boneblack, or animal charcoal. This is extensively used in refining sugar.

Two barrels of this ground bone are then spread on the bottom of a wooden vat. Four gallons of the liquids that run out of the retort are then thrown upon it, and the whole thoroughly stirred.

Which will be sold CHEAP FOR CASH. They respectfully solicit a continuance of the liberal patronage heretofore extended to them.
