

An Improvisator.

EDWARD MERLIN was charged with being drunk and noisy in a house in Cross street; and it was also intimated by the complainant that Ned was in all probability a little cracked. Mr. Merlin was considerably out at the knees and elbows, and his shirt seemed as if it might be the identical two napkins, sewed together, which belonged to the second most fortunate of Sir John Falstaff's country troopers. In short, Ned, Merlin appeared to be a regular loafer from his pimple cover, to his shanks mares, with the sole exception, that his tongue went like a perpetual motion, whereas it is one of the peculiarities of the fraternity that they are too lazy to talk. The most interesting feature, however, of Mr. Merlin's character is that he's a poet and that too of so unadulterated a complexion, that whatever he says runs into rhyme as naturally as if it was bespoke and paid for at a penny a line.

Mrs. Donovan, the complainant, is a little Irish woman, who keeps one of those 'hole in the wall' shanties, where they purport to sell 'the best of good liquors, at three cents a glass,' and it appeared in evidence that Mr. Merlin had done every justice to her 'best of good liquors'—but had ventured no farther in her favor, for when she began to remind him of the 'three cents a glass' part of the ceremony, he went into a blaze of indignation, and let the arrows of his wrath fly around him like a feu de joie of congreve rockets.

'Paix you honor,' continued Mrs. Donovan at the conclusion of a long-drawn-out story of her woes, the drunk me brandy wid as little compunction as if it was nothin' but ditch water, for the devil a sup or a pint an' a half he left behind him to serve another customer.

Magistrate—Did he take it by force? Mrs. Donovan—Mushla, no, your honor, but he went on like a play aether until I thought he was raisin' the devil, and bad win to me if I wasn't afeared to say a single word until the sorra a drop was left in the bottle. In truth, your honor, if he's not a witch—or a devil—or something in that line, I think he must be out of his seven senses.

Magistrate—Merlin, have you anything to say to this business?

Merlin—
Lay my lord, as quick as winking,
The liquor was not worth the drinking;
And charge the hog I have my eyes on
With selling drugs that's worse than poison.

Mrs. Donovan—That's the way he went on when he was drinking up all me beautiful brandy widout payin for it, yer honor. Jaiz, your blaguard, if you call me a hog again, I'll smash your ugly mug into smithereens.

Merlin—
Beware, good woman, say not so,
And we'll be friends, before we go;
'Thou' much I fear your liquor horrid,
Will bore a hole out through my forehead.

Mrs. Donovan—The devil minds you or any body that spalks in such an outlandish language as that. Your honor, dear, do you think he git it all out of a bog, or is it cracked wid larnin he is?

Magistrate—He's either a fool or a rogue. Merlin answer me plainly, what are you?

Merlin—
A man, my lord, from hat to shoe;
Flesh, blood and bones, the same as you.
Magistrate—I mean, what's your business?

Merlin—
My business—bah—I scorn the name,
My business is to seek for fame;
The muses, sir, are my delight;
I woe them all from morn till night;
Come, sweet Urania, heavenly maid,
Oh come to these own Merlin's aid.

Magistrate—No hushin'g, sir, how do you get your bread?

Merlin—
My bread, sir, Oh! my answer's ripe;
I live on a wooden like a snipe,
I mean a woodcock, but you know
The rhyme says snipe, so let it go.

Magistrate—Give over rhyming, sir, and tell me plainly where do you live?

Merlin—
When the sun is bright and hot,
All around I seek my lot,
Lolling in sequestered nook,
Listening to the babbling brook,
Or, scorning blanket, sheet or rug,
Snoozing in the Park, so snug;
But in cold weather 'tis my plan
To lie, my lord, where best I can.

Magistrate—Hang you, you rascal, speak in prose.

Merlin—
I will, my lord—by all the gods,
I meant no harm, but where's the odds.
O blest Urania, come along,
And give my lord a soul for song.

Mrs. Donovan—Lord help the poor craythur but I believe he wants a straight waistcoat worse nor my brandy. Your honor darlint, I'll forgive him the brandy, an' the braikin of me chairs, but I think I'd be a charity to have him put somewhere that I'd bring him to his raisin, an' purwit him from spalkin such unchristian a language.

Merlin—
Thus an I don'd, where'er I go,
My jewels before whine to throw.
Mrs. Donovan—You blackguard, if you call me a swine I'll make you pay for me brandy if you wor as mad as a March hare.

Magistrate—Does any one here know this man?

Watchman, Yes, sir, I do—he's called the mad poet, and is always drinking brandy, and talking nonsense; he does nothing for a living, and lives nowhere, I believe he could'n't speak like any other man if he tried.

Merlin—
'Tis true I am before my time,
For all men yet shall speak in rhyme.
My lord, I am no cheat, for see
The proofs of my true poetry.
My hat, with half the crown bent in;
My trowsersloons, not worth a pin;
My coat, deficient of a skirt;
And with, at best, but half a shirt;
And then my thirst for brandy, sure
You want no more—the proof is pure.

Magistrate—I believe you're a better poet than a man, but your doggerel can't save you—I must commit you as a vagrant.

Merlin—
O shades of Homer, Milton, O!
And I must I to the treadmill go.
Magistrate—No, Homer and Shakspeare say that you need only be sent a stone breaking.

Merlin—
O Mrs. Donovan be kind,
But if you'll kill, why I'm resigned.
Mrs. Donovan—Well now, that I might'n't sin, but if that is'n't the height of assurance. However, no matter, for it'll all rub out whin its dry. Your honor, wont you forgive him, an' I'll take him home, an' give him his breakfast, an' see what I can make ov him.

Magistrate—Mrs. Donovan, are you a maid or a mermaid woman?

Mrs. Donovan—Neither, your honor but I'm a widdy, and a snug wan too; the Lord be praised for all his mercies.

Magistrate—I thought so! but you may go, and take your poet along with you.

Mrs. Donovan—I thank your honor kindly; but faix now ye'es need'n't be laughin, for I mains no harm.

Merlin—Se let them laugh, who cares; the day is mine.
For poetry and beauty take the shine;
On, lady on, not waste the precious hours,
But let us hasten to ambrosial bowers.

And so saying, the immortal Mr. Merlin, and poetry-smitten 'Widdy' Donovan made themselves scarce.

This Marin, whom we have frequently seen at Washington Market, can talk for hours together in doggerel, whereof the above quotations may be taken as fair specimens.

'A WHOPPER.'—They tell of big rats in the line of the Ohio canal, and one of them is said to have towed a boat, using his tail for a tow line. That's a whopper—of a rat we mean. If we should attempt to beat this rat story, we would tell of that musquitto in the Montezuma swamp on the Erie canal, who stole a boat pole for a tooth pick.
