GIRL IS SAVED BY ACCIDENT.
 Escape From Drowning Which is Altogether Unique—The Girl Had Been Literally Scooped Up Out of the Water by the Scow's Machinery—Her Story.

New York, September 15.—Miss Fannie Day, a young department store employee of this city, who was one of a party of eight persons in a naphtha launch which was capsized in the lower bay early to-day, had the most remarkable escape from death by drowning that any human being probably has ever experienced. Three of her companions were swept to the bottom when the launch, with disabled engines, was run into by a mud scow. Miss Day had gone down with the others, and when nothing was seen of her for hours afterwards it was reported that she had met death. But when the mud scow had been towed nearly to its destination and the deck hands were adjusting the dumping apparatus at the bottom, they were startled to find a handsomely dressed young woman in one of the pockets. Miss Day had been literally scooped out of the water by the dumping machinery, which had been left open after the scow had discharged its last load at sea.

Miss Day was just regaining consciousness when discovered and had begun to call feebly for help. Two women and one man who were in the launch were drowned, while three men and one woman, the latter Miss Mabel Cook, a friend and room mate of Miss Day were picked up by the passing craft soon after the accident occurred.

The party were returning last night from Sheepshead Bay, where they had dinner, and although a stiff gale was blowing and the seas were running high, all went well until the engines of the launch gave out. All night long the little craft, owned by W. W. David, of Jamaica, L. I., drifted helplessly in the bay. The women suffered severely from the exposure, for the night was cold and water was continuously breaking into the boat. When daylight came the men and women were overjoyed to find a tug with two scows in tow making directly for them. They called loudly for help and signalled their distress. The tug swept by and apparently they were not seen by those on board. So close did the tug run that the wind drove the second scow against the launch and caused it to upset. The eight occupants of the boat were all in the water in an instant struggling for their lives. Still they say the tug did not stop. Three of the men and Miss Cook managed to get hold of the overturned launch and clung to it until the tug McCandlish Brothers and the incoming steamer El Paso rescued them. The survivors were taken to Stapleton, L. I., and sent to an infirmary, where they refused at first to divulge their own names or those of the persons who were drowned.

Miss Day, when brought to her home in St. Nicholas avenue this afternoon, said that in the party were two Mr. Dodds, Miss Cook and two married couples, whose names she did not know. The start, she said, was made from Sheepshead Bay about 8 o'clock last night. Then the engine broke down. At daybreak the scows were sighted, and, although every one screamed for help, neither any one on the tug nor on the scows seemed to see or hear them.

The collision then came and, although the party, even to the women, worked to keep the boat upright, it turned turtle.

"I went down deep, but finally came up ever so slowly," said Miss Day. "I was gasping for breath and kicking with all my might and main."

"Finally my head hit something and I could rise no more. I was terribly frightened and although it all took place in an instant, it seemed a lifetime to me. I was half suffocating, but had presence of mind enough to feel along with my hands over my head."

"Suddenly like a cork I bobbed up, in an open space. I cried for help, but no one came. I tried to climb up the sides but they were slimy and slippery. Finally I secured a resting place on some chains after having swam for an hour almost."

"By and by an old man looked over into the well; he said: 'How the devil did you get there?'"

"I never saw such a scared man in my life. I yelled: 'Throw me a rope if you don't want me to drown.' He did so and I wound it around my waist and arm and he pulled me upon deck."

The Virtue of Laziness.
 London Chronicle.

I think most men who have been educated at any large public school will readily call to mind numerous instances of boys who were always winning prizes yet have not done anything worth mentioning in after life. And I am confident that upon investigating the early years of those who have led a strenuous and remarkably successful career it will be found that the majority were rather lazy than not before they entered upon the actual battle of life. Mr. Chamberlain's school days seem to have been wholly undistinguished.

Oliver Goldsmith was looked upon by his schoolmaster as a dunce. That may possibly have been the fault of the latter. I fancy there is something specially narrowing to the mind in a scholastic career, just as there is in a doctor's. That, at least, is my individual experience. Gladstone never took a prize at school, if I remember aright, though he subsequently gained a double-first at Oxford. Those late high priests of science or philosophy, Darwin, Huxley, Tyndall, Herbert, Spencer, did not particularly shine in their younger days.

We find plenty of evidence that people who in the first stages of their career make prolonged and exhaustive demands on their stores of nerve force rarely attain length of days. Whether those demands have been made merely in the pursuit of wealth or for some more noble object does not matter. The result is the same. Thus Napoleon considered about four hours in bed "a good night's rest." He joined the majority at fifty-one. Dickens passed over at fifty-eight, his great rival, Thackeray, at fifty-two. Byron achieved his unique reputation in the short compass of thirty-six, Mozart in thirty-five, Schiller in forty-five. The late Mr. Alfred Beit died at fifty-three.

Men Wanted Today.

Men who cannot be bought.
 Men whose word is their vote.
 Men who put character above wealth.
 Men who possess opinions and a will.
 Men who see the divine in the common.
 Men who "would rather be right than be president."
 Men who will not lose their individuality in a crowd.
 Men who will be as honest in small things as in great things.
 Men who will make no compromise with questionable things.
 Men whose ambitions are not confined to their own selfish desires.
 Men who are willing to sacrifice private interests for the public good.

 Men who are not afraid to take chances; who are not afraid of failure.
 Men of courage, who are not cowards in any part of their natures.
 Men who are larger than business, who outstep their vocation.
 Men who give thirty-six inches for a yard, and thirty-two quarts for a bushel.
 Philanthropists who will not let their rights hand know what their left hand is doing.
 Men who will not have one brand of honesty for business purposes and another for private life.
 Young men who will be true to their highest ideals in spite of the sneers and laughter of their companions.

Follow the dictates of your conscience, and it's doughnuts to fudge you will never land in jail.

"Yes, Dubley's wife died while you were abroad."
 "Ah! then he's either going to extremes in his mourning or he's looking for a new wife."
 "How do you mean?"
 "I notice that he's dyed his hair and mustache a deep black."

He—Why do we do the meanest and most hateful things to those we love the best?
