"The national Democrats need the sinues of war—the aforesaid sinues being spelled m-o-n-e-y."—Columbia Record.

"The aforesaid sinues" must be spelled some way other than the Record puts it.

The State executive committee is to meet in Columbia today to receive the report of the subcommittee which has been investigating the recent primary. It is expected that the State committee will today declare the results of the primary and order a second primary for attorney general.

Concluding an editorial under the caption, "One Difference," the Columbia State says:

"In Tillmanism the people were mostly fooled. In Bleaseism they can't be.

"Bleaseism is frankly and sincerely vicious.

"Tillmanism charged what it knew to be false and promised what it knew could not be performed."

Without going into a discussion of Tillmanism and Bleaseism, we desire to call attention to the fact that the Columbia State in the last primary, made the effort, to defeat Blease with Tillman. Tillman was the leader of Tillmanism, of course. Was the Columbia State trying to encompass the defeat of both Tillman and Blease, using Tillman for this purpose? Governor Blease gave out some telegrams from the editor of the Columbia State to the State's Washington correspondent, which the editor of the Columbia State has not denied. Where does the Columbia State stand in re Tillman, anyway?

SENATOR TILLMAN.

Senator Tillman continues to write letters and to give them out to the press. His latest contribution to contemporaneous literature is a letter to Mr. W. H. L. McLaurin, of Latta, which is "given to the press as Senator Tillman's defence and explanation of the oft-repeated charge in all the daily papers, that he is responsible for the corruption which is believed to have been bred by the dispensary system." The senator blames those who changed the law as it was originally passed "for all the corruption that has marked the dispensary experiment in the State control of whiskey." The Herald and News will publish Senator Tillman's letter in full in its next issue.

It is reported from Trenton that Senator Tillman, with the aid of his private secretary, Mr. C. Granville Wyche, "has been collecting facts for an autobiography of the senior senator which he proposes to write during the months until congress convenes." An autobiography of the senior senator will be of interest not only to the people of South Carolina, but to the people of the nation at large, and its publication will be eagerly awaited. Perhaps if the senior senator had devoted himself to this autobiography during this summer, to the exclusion of letters in regard to the governor's race, he would have had a stronger hold upon the people of South Carolina. He angered a great many Blease supporters by his pre-election pronunciamento against the candidacy of Gov. Blease, and he seems to have displeased some of the anti-Blease people since the election by his letters urging haste in the primary probe.

The people, however, are not apt to harbor hard feelings against Senator Tillman for any great length of time. That he was misled into giving out his pre-election statement, we believe. In the days to come his great services to South Carolina in the United States senate will in all probability overshadow what appears to us to be the unwise course he took prior to the recent primary and what some of the anti-Blease people have severely censured him for since.

In the meantime, his autobiography will be eagerly looked for.

To Your Wife, to Your Children, to Your Business, to Society

makes Life Insurance necessary.

For a great many years, Life Insurance has been recognized as the one means of adequately protecting the home. Now, it is being looked to as a means of

PROTECTION FOR BUSINESS

In the business world at the present time the only means of capitalizing man's future earning power is CREDIT. Credit, however, is always limited by the ever-present menace of sudden death, unless it is backed by Life Insurance.

The granting and receiving of credit today underlies all business. Your wife is granted credit at the department stores for goods purchased in your name. You are granted credit by your bank and by others. It is probable, too, that you grant credit to persons with whom you do business. Today there are few men who OWE NO MAN ANYTHING.

With Life Insurance, however, you may secure additional credit, and furthermore, you may know that your wife, or your children or your business associates will have sufficient money with which to meet all liabilities in case you are taken from them.

There are many assets that are not readily convertible into cash; and a man's brain, while often his biggest asset, is worth nothing at his death. Life Insurance will capitalize your potential earning power. One man alone is powerless. Thousands associated together, however, lend the strength of all to each. In other words, the good of all applied to the affairs of each solves the problem.

THE EDGEFIELD ADVERTISER AND THE FACTS.

Our esteemed cotemporary, the Edgefield Advertiser, ought to acquaint itself a little better with the facts in regard to the recent primary in South Carolina, and a little better with the virtue of consistency, before venturing to make such positive statements and charges in regard to the primary.

"The Advertiser is not surprised that Spartanburg is deemed the proper place to begin the election investigation," it says. "A county that will repudiate such men as Senator Carlisle and Representative Osborne needs to be watched. There is something inherently wrong with such a people."

It happens that Spartanburg repudiated only one of those mentioned by the Advertiser, having re-elected Senator Carlisle. Under this state of facts, how does the Advertiser, in its wisdom, classify the people of Spartanburg?

The Advertiser, in another paragraph in this same issue, says that Newberry is to have a third primary. Newberry hasn't had a second yet. Give us a little time.

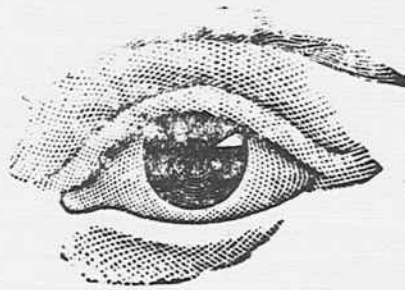

In another paragraph, the Advertiser opines that "less talk, fewer newspaper articles and more actual work is what is needed in the primary election investigation."

In this same issue the Advertiser says there is something "inherently wrong" with the people of Spartanburg; says that "a study of the election figures; noticing in whose favor the majorities in the several counties stood, easily establishes the fact that South Carolina is sorely burdened with illiteracy;" and, further, that "it is practically certain that hundreds, perhaps thousands, of men perjured themselves at the polls in the recent primary."

The Advertiser doubtless realizes that perjury is a very serious charge to bring against people; and that if such a charge were brought against an individual, without proof to substantiate it, a suit for libel would probably lie. The Advertiser, however, is content to deal in glittering generalities, throwing out its blanket charge over the people of South Carolina.

We have no hope of being able to bring the Advertiser to see to what lengths of intemperance an unyielding prejudice will sometimes lead one, but we have quoted from the Advertiser simply as an object lesson, for what it may be worth. A careful review of facts, and a realization of the virtues of consistency and of temperance in speech and in the making of charges, would no doubt be advantageous to the Advertiser.

Sins Against Your Eyes.

Reading or working without needed glasses or with badly fitted ones is a sin against your eyes.

EYE STRAIN

is certainly a factor in producing disease of every part of the eye, and reading with a poor light, reading on a moving train or reading while lying down are offenses which require the muscles to do extra work. Properly fitted glasses will relieve much of the strain even under the above unfavorable conditions.
