

LIVELY SENSATIONAL MEET AT BAMBERG

SOME EXCITEMENT EXPECTED
BUT NOTHING HAPPENS.

Governor Tears Up Telegram Handed
Him by County Chairman.

Bamberg, June 27.—The United States senatorial campaign meeting here today partook in some slight degree to the boisterous nature of the gubernatorial campaign meeting of two years ago. That was the "rough" day of the entire campaign that year. It was on the morning succeeding the Spartanburg dictaphone episode, and the language of one of the candidates in referring to the alleged revelations was so nauseating that ladies were compelled to leave the grounds. At no other places visited this campaign have the lines of partisan cleavage been so definitely drawn. Other voters have not been so emphatic in their preference of candidates. At no other place were the candidates more liberally applauded. At no place have more questions been fired at the speakers, nor the parrying and thrusting and the acid replies been more appreciated or returned with more deadly effect.

Tears Up Telegram.

When the governor was introduced today he was asked by H. C. Folk, the county chairman, to answer a telegram sent during the recent session of the State legislature, asking why the governor was not supporting Mr. Folk for master, when Mr. Folk was the Democratic primary nominee, but had sent another name to the senate for confirmation. The chairman also propounded an additional question: "Is a man who violates his oath at the ballot box a fit person to send to the United States senate?"

The governor totally ignored the latter question and taking the telegram, tore it into shreds, spat upon it and stamped it with his feet. The governor then said: "If that dirty coward who made the threat against me in the drug store is in the audience, now is the time for him to do his work." There was no movement in the audience, nor any response. Gov. Blease asserted that some one in a nearby drug store had said: "I want to hear Gov. Blease today, as it will be the last speech he will ever make." There was no response and the governor again said if the coward were there it was the proper time to carry out the threat.

Governor Guarded.

The governor had come to Bamberg prepared for trouble, as four State detectives were close by at all times, closely guarding the governor against any possible attack. A deputy sheriff from Newberry was also in the party.

Approximately 1,000 voters heard the candidates. The meeting was held in a grove near the Southern depot, with H. C. Folk, who has been county chairman since the county was organized, presiding. Prayer was offered by the Rev. W. H. Hodge. The speeches were limited to 35 minutes.

Calls For Order.

In introducing the first speakers today, the chairman reminded the audience of the meeting two years ago "which was heralded to the world as a disgrace to South Carolina." The disturbances then he said were "led by and indulged in by henchmen of certain candidates brought here for that purpose." Mr. Folk then read a set of resolutions recently adopted at the Bamberg county convention which would require all speakers to employ language that would not be offensive to the women who happened to attend. These same resolutions also provided adequate police power to enable the chairman to quell any disturbance.

Mr. Jennings was the advance guard of the speaking brigade today. When introduced he was met with cheers for Blease, with counter cheering for both him and Senator Smith. When he launched into an animated defense of the new primary rules again there were hurrahs for the speaker and the governor. One in the audience told the mayor of Sumter that he would not be elected to the United States senate. "I'm not worrying about that," Mr. Jennings replied, and the crowd applauded the speaker with a marked degree of enthusiasm.

At this juncture the question was asked, "Why was it imposed that we should write our names in full when we register?" The speaker drew a prolonged round of applause when he said: "There are so many people with the same initials, but who have totally different names when written out in full, that this arrangement was absolutely necessary to prevent another man's voting in your place."

When the speaker concluded his discussion of the State convention that framed the primary rules there was a shout "Hurrah for the State convention."

After Others' Records.

Then the speaker took up the records of his opponents. "I have no public record," the speaker said. "And ain't you glad of it?" came back from the crowd. Senator Smith's record, Mr. Jennings claimed, was only "cotton." "Oh, no," some one answered, "that won't go." "It consists mainly in a few resolutions offered in congress," the speaker went on, "to investigate Hayne and others to prevent gambling in cotton futures."

This criticism was keenly relished, and calls of "That's right," and "Tell it to them, Jennings," followed in rapid succession.

Nothing the speaker said about the governor elicited more applause than when he said: "The governor says he's proud of his record. Then he should at least be proud of me, for I expect to help him to exhibit that record on every stump in South Carolina." When Mr. Jennings was decrying the idea of petitions signed by the juries, somebody said the "jurymen have just found out that they are mistaken." The speaker's reply was, "Then all these 14,000 jurymen must have been awfully ignorant." This was followed by much cheering, and a Blease adherent, sitting on the edge of the platform, kept repeating, "Go it, Jennings; if I don't vote for Blease I'll vote for you."

Mr. Pollock urged the voters, when the time for making a selection came, not to measure him around the waist, but around the hatband. He also reminded Bamberg citizens that he had behind him no political machine. "I have done nothing for you," he continued. "I have neither appointed any of you to office, nor have I granted any of you pardons." He only asked for the votes of the ugly men. "Then you'll sure be elected," some one answered.

"Yes, and I'll get your vote," the speaker called back. "What are you going to do with Blease," another asked.

"I'll get to that presently," Mr. Pollock shot back, and someone in another part of the crowd volunteered the information, "Nothing. I can answer that."

The speaker then discussed the Walterboro speech of the governor, and pronounced some practices of the governor when paralleled with the principles as set forth in this speech as "the most monumental of jokes." The two to which he gave particular attention were the enforcement of the law in conformity with the verdict of the courts of the law and trial by jury.

Honor Roll Rouses Mirth.

No stunt that any candidate has "pulled off" during the campaign has created more genuine merriment than the reading of Mr. Pollock's "honor roll" of "furriners," taken from certain club lists in Charleston. The speaker's pronunciation of these rhythmical names, in a strictly polished staccato nasal strain, has not yet failed to convulse any audience on which it has been tried. When this had been read today, the speaker asked: "Do you want those people, who can't speak a word of English, and who are voted by corrupt politicians as dumb driven cattle, to govern South Carolina?"

When the chorus of "Nos" had died down, he further asked: "Do you want to be lined up with Vincent Chicco, Jim Sottile, the Italian Dago and king of blind tigers, on the governor's staff? If you don't they are the ones with whom the governor has sided."

Senator Smith said that his opponents had been trying to divorce him and "Miss Cotton," "my old sweetheart." "They've been trying to create family trouble," he continued. "They can't divide us. We will remain inseparable until we are clothed in purple and fine linen." The senator then quoted scripture to the effect that the Lord chasteneth them whom He loveth. "Then be certain, must love me," he went on. "For a time I thought that I'd have only one lawyer to chase me in South Carolina. Lo and behold, I now have three. Some of you will understand why it is so devilish hard to get something done in the United States senate when I remind you that we have 78 lawyers among the 96 senators in Washington. On every measure each has to have his say. They can talk on either side equally well, and then split the difference."

Senator Smith explained to Bamberg citizens how they could take their papers on real estate or agricultural products to a member bank and get money on this as collateral. He further made it clear that if a man's name did not get from the local bank, then all that was necessary was that the local banker should endorse the paper and forward it to the central regional bank and the money drawn from that through the local member.

Some one in the crowd asked Senator Smith what Ben Tillman had been doing. "Fighting the world, the flesh and the devil," the junior senator was quick to retort.

Another wanted to know how much cotton the speaker planted. "Well, a sight more than I can tend, I guess," was the reply.

Senator Smith dismissed the accusation that Hoke Smith of Georgia was the author of one of the Smith bills by saying that "the Georgia senator had no more to do with introducing that bill than he had to do with the nebular hypothesis or the plan of salvation."

Same Old Story.

(The governor again today took Senator Smith to task on the subject of "Haskellism" when he said the senator tried to defeat Ben Tillman. He also taxed the senator with voting, while a member of the State legislature, against a separate coach law. He said that Senator Smith did not favor a resolution, offered at the Baltimore convention by a Western delegate, to repeal the 14th amendment of the constitution of the United States. He referred to the lynching of a negro in Bamberg county for attacking a white girl and added: "Yet some of you here today are hollering for a man who voted to pay $2,000 to any negro's family that was lynched. That man is Senator Smith."

Gov. Blease again paid his respects to the State convention and the new primary rules then formulated. These, he said, were concocted in the Jefferson hotel, Columbia. The delegates, he said, did not act like Democrats with Democrats, neither as if in convention, but rather in caucus behind closed doors. Referring to his pardons, he said that he had pardoned four already this week and would pardon another when he got to Columbia tonight.

The governor at Bamberg today said that the State's correspondent had misunderstood him at the Barnwell meeting in reporting that he had said "Senator Smith is a Republican." What the governor says he said on the Barnwell platform was: "Senator Smith voted with the Republicans."

HUSBAND RESCUED DESPAIRING WIFE

After Four Years of Discouraging
Conditions, Mrs. Bullock Gave
Up in Despair. Husband
Came to Rescue.

Catron, Ky.—In an interesting letter from this place, Mrs. Bettie Bullock writes as follows: "I suffered for four years, with womanly troubles, and during this time, I could only sit up for a little while, and could not walk anywhere at all. At times, I would have severe pains in my left side.

The doctor was called in, and his treatment relieved me for a while, but I was soon confined to my bed again. After that, nothing seemed to do me any good. I had gotten so weak I could not stand, and I gave up in despair.

At last, my husband got me a bottle of Cardui, the woman's tonic, and I commenced taking it. From the very first dose, I could tell it was helping me. I can now walk two miles without its tiring me, and am doing my work." "If you are all run down from womanly troubles, don't give up in despair. Try Cardui, the woman's tonic. It has helped more than a million women, in its 50 years of wonderful success, and should surely help you, too. Your druggist has sold Cardui for years. He knows what it will do. Ask him. He will recommend it. Begin taking Cardui today.
